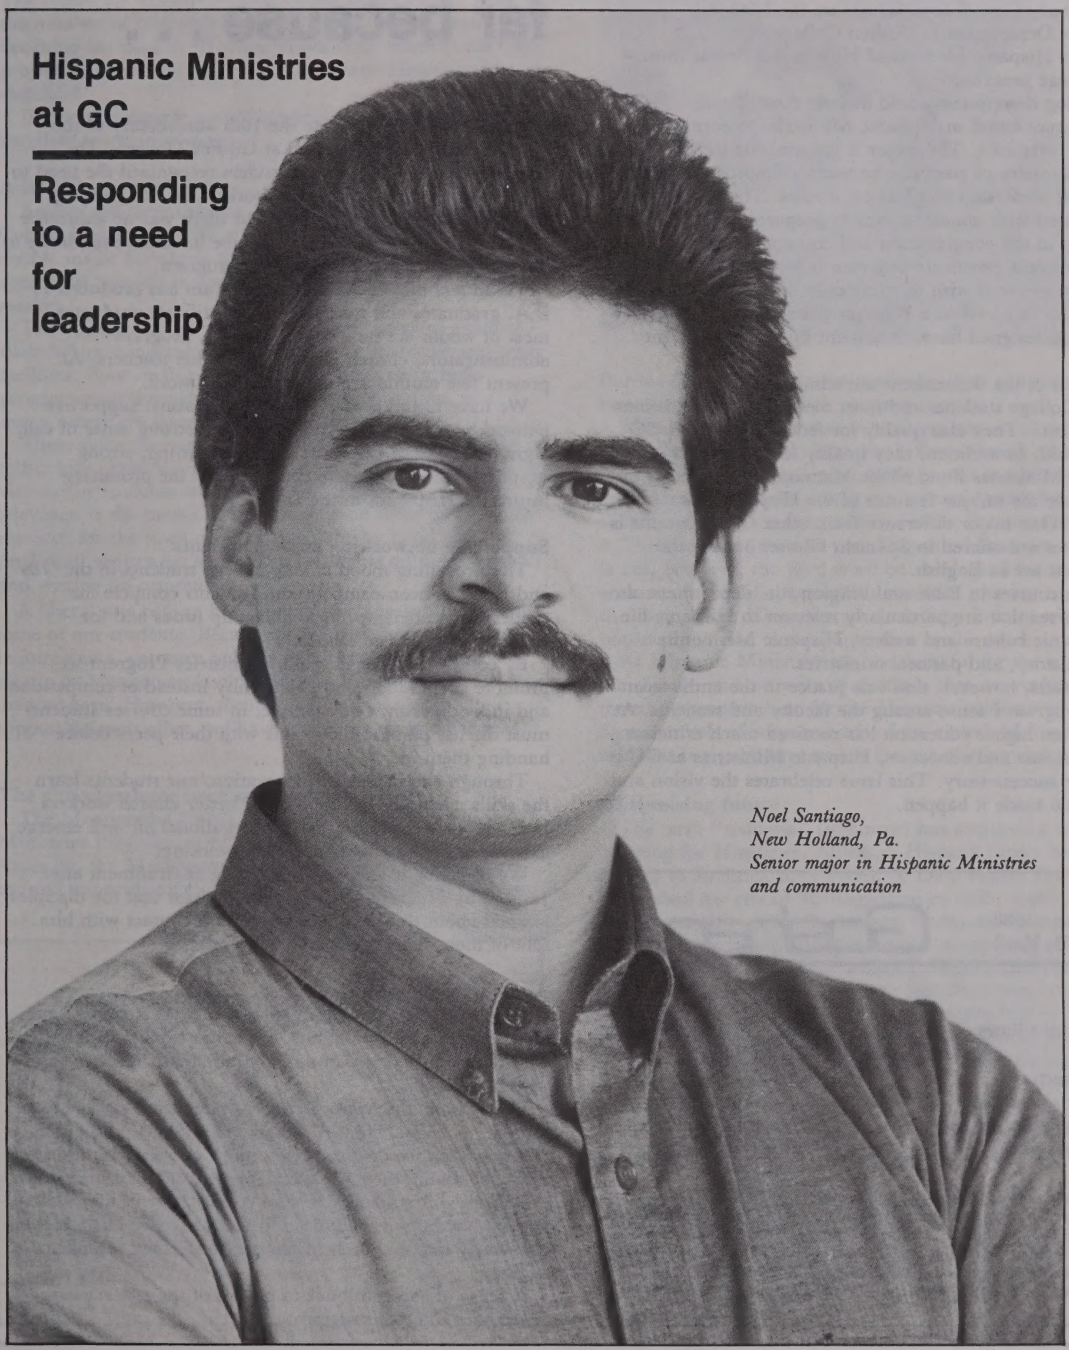
Hispanic Ministries at GC

Responding to a need for leadership



Noel Santiago,
New Holland, Pa.
Senior major in Hispanic Ministries and communication

About this issue

This issue of the Bulletin focuses on the Hispanic Ministries Department at Goshen College.

What is Hispanic Ministries? How is it different from other college programs?

A catalog description would include these details. Students may enroll in Hispanic Ministries to earn a major, minor or certificate. The major is for students interested in pastoral ministry or pastors who want to improve their skills in pastoral leadership and biblical studies. The minor may be combined with another major to prepare students for lay leadership in the congregation and community.

The two-year certificate program is for more mature church leaders who wish to study only in Spanish or who are not able to enroll in a B.A. program. This 60-hour program is designed for each student by the department chair.

Students in the department are admitted as regular Goshen College students and must meet regular admissions requirements. They also qualify for federal, state and GC financial aid. In addition, they qualify for grants from the Minority Ministries Fund of the Mennonite Church.

What are the unique features of the Hispanic Ministries program? One major difference from other GC programs is that courses are offered in Spanish. Classes outside the department are in English.

Besides courses in Bible and religion, the department also offers courses that are particularly relevant to Hispanic life, like Hispanic culture and society, Hispanic Mennonite Church history, and pastoral ministries.

These facts, however, don't do justice to the enthusiasm for the program I sense among the faculty and students. At a time when higher education has received much criticism from politicans and educators, Hispanic Ministries at GC is a genuine success story. This issue celebrates the vision and people who made it happen. —JDY

We have come this far because . . .

By José Ortiz

In 1989 we will celebrate the 10th anniversary of the Hispanic Ministries Program at Goshen College. The program began when church leaders recognized the need to train pastors and other church workers for the growing Hispanic Mennonite churches. But there was no assurance of funding or faculty, nor did anyone have the experience to design and administer this type of program.

Yet in less than a decade the program has produced 14 B.A. graduates and nine two-year certificate graduates, most of whom are now church pastors, program administrators, church planters and Bible teachers. At present five alumni are doing graduate work.

We have come this far for several reasons: supportive networking among the student body; a strong sense of call; a gifted faculty; a favorable academic setting; strong support of the Mennonite churches and the promising future for Hispanics in the U.S.A.

Supportive networking among students

The prevailing mood among college students in the '70s and '80s has been competition. Students compete for grades, for leadership, for scholarship funds and for entrance to graduate schools.

By contrast, in the Hispanic Ministries Program we promote cooperation and community instead of competition and individualism. For example, in some courses students must discuss parts of the exams with their peers before handing them in.

Through experience in cooperation, our students learn the skills necessary for them to be better church workers later on. One day a healthy congregational life will emerge as a result of this experience in networking.

We continue to model our learning environment after Jesus' way of teaching his disciples. Much that the disciples learned about the Kingdom came from contact with him. Out of their being together, truth emerged.

A strong sense of call

With rare exceptions Hispanic Ministries students enter the program as young adults. Some are experienced pastors who realize that they can not continue their ministry with yesterday's skills.

By contrast, the average Anglo student uses college to discern vocational choices. Some will graduate and enter voluntary service or join Mennonite Central Committee as a way of testing their vocational choice and academic skills.

Because our students come to college later in life, most already have a sense of vocation and are more likely to walk assertively into a church assignment once they receive a degree.

A sense of call continues to be one of the criteria for acceptance into the program.

A gifted faculty

Hispanic faculty members are one of the scarcest commodities in the North American academic panorama. The future for Hispanic faculty is not bright either, since the number of Hispanics entering education has been declining for the last 10 years. Apparently teachers have not projected themselves in a way that attracts Hispanics into that field.

In our department we are grateful to the Lord for the excellent teachers we have.

A liberal arts setting

Among the incentives for Hispanics to come to Goshen College is the possibility of getting a double major. With a double major they have the opportunity to function as bi-vocational persons, a distinct advantage in today's job market.

The college also offers a unique opportunity to enhance their future ministries through access to broadcast and other facilities. Four or five Hispanics are involved in radio programming through WGCS, the college station, and many others are learning word processing.

These skills are ones they will use in ministry in an age of technology. Whereas the apostle Paul was transformed by a vision, our students are learning video production, since television is the means of communication these days. While research for the book of Luke was done by hand and the final draft written on a scroll, our students do their research and writing on computers.

A liberal arts college like Goshen also poses difficulties for some of our students. Because of the cost, language requirements, entrance policies and a student life directed mostly to Mennonite-Anglo students, Hispanics can feel isolated here. However, through our emphasis on supporting each other, we have overcome these obstacles.

The churches have been supportive

The Mennonite Church has supported the Hispanic Ministries Program at the national and local levels. At Ames 85, the Mennonite Church General Assembly acted to fund minority education and the same spirit prevailed at Purdue 87. As our students graduate, local congregations have welcomed them with places to serve.

Mennonites are pioneers in training pastors at the baccalaureate and certificate level. Even though church colleges train teachers, social workers and accountants in four years, the idea of preparing pastoral leadership at the college level is quite foreign to mainline Protestants.

The success of the two-year Hispanic Ministries program is not, however, the final word on theological training. We also need more Hispanics with graduate training in theology. More Hispanics are attending divinity schools but not in proportion to the population or the need.

At Hispanic Ministries we are thankful for the support of the church, and we want to continue that networking with them. A common base for the Hispanic students will help to form symbols of corporate life of the church of the future and that is a good investment for our offering dollars.

A promising future

The term "mañana" (tomorow) has acquired a new meaning for Hispanics. Although Hispanics have been coming to America since Ponce de León visited Florida and established the city of St. Augustine in 1565, many Anglo-Americans view us as newcomers. Today we have a new sense of pride based on an awareness of our long history in this country.

There is also expectation as the Hispanic population in the U.S. grows. Today seven percent of the U.S. population is Hispanic (18 million); by 2010 that figure will grow to somewhere between 27 to 42 million. In other words, the need for trained leadership in the Hispanic church will continue to grow.

Sí, the mañana is promising, and it is being met with confidence and humility at Hispanic Ministries.

José Ortiz is director of the Hispanic Ministries Department. He graduated from Hesston College in 1961 and Goshen College in 1962. He received an M.A. from Eastern Baptist Seminary in 1969, a D.Min. from McCormick Theological Seminary in 1979 and an M.P.A. from Indiana University in 1982. He has been at GC since 1983.

Making disciples

By Samuel López '80

Even though my participation with the Hispanic Ministries program was short, I am grateful for the vision it gave me. The Christian environment at GC and my relationship to the Spanish Mennonite Church made me mature in my Christian life.

The motivation to continue studying at the Goshen Biblical Seminary was a step of faith. I firmly believe that Goshen College and Goshen Biblical Seminary are two institutions where the Hispanic Mennonites can develop their understanding of the Christian faith that will help them to minister to the Hispanic needs in North America.

Today I am pastor of the New Holland (Pa.) Spanish Mennonite Church and director of the Mennonite Bible Institute. A few months ago, one of my students wrote me this note: "Thank you for being my teacher," and he signed it, "Your disciple!" I will gladly add to his remark: "Thanks to God and to our Mennonite colleges and seminaries that are helping the Mennonite Church make disciples of Jesus Christ!"

Program changed my life

By Wanda Aquino '84

I was born in New York City and raised in Puerto Rico. I became acquainted with the Mennonite Church through my education.

When I came to Goshen College in 1981, my goal was to obtain a B.A. and then go out into the world and be somebody. However, the Lord works in special ways, and I ended up in the Hispanic Ministries Program.

The program turned out to be a very good experience because I could learn, not only from my professors, but also from my classmates. Even though I didn't realize it at the time, I began seeing things in a new way. I learned about the way of peace, about justice and most importantly about service to God and to our brothers and sisters.

During my time in Goshen, I was one of two or three women in the program, which was composed mostly of Hispanic laymen and pastors. When graduation came, I discovered that I was the first woman to graduate from the Hispanic Ministries Program who also received a B.A.

At Goshen I met a Bolivian, Abel Aquino, who is now my husband. After graduating from Goshen, Abel and I then served for a time with MCC. Then we decided to pursue graduate education at CBN University. I am completing an M.A. in communications with a concentration in photography.

After being away from the Mennonite community the past several years, I realize the importance of peace, justice and service to others. I feel that I am called to work with the church and the Hispanic community and this conviction comes from the seed that Goshen College planted in my heart.

"Let there be light"

By Rodolfo P. Jiménez '84

In 1980 I said "good-bye" to my job in a Chicago bank and "hello" to Goshen College. There was enthusiasm in the air. Brother Rafael Falcón gave us a warm welcome and advice for our academic journey: "If somebody has done it before, so can you." The future was calling us to prepare for bilingual ministry in North America.

Our assignments in Spanish were richly seasoned by Ron Collins' pastoral experience; our group discussions and fellowship were the begining of new friendships and intellectual growth.

My initiation in English work resembled a journey through a troubled sea. I remember the long nights and the awe and wonder I experienced in my battle with that demon called English. "With a little help from my friends," faculty and fellow students, new shores appeared in my life.

Hispanic Ministries enabled me to get a second major in sociology. Howard Kauffman shared wordly wisdom with us before retiring. Also, Hispanic Ministries prepared me for seminary work. What a wonderful shore indeed!

In my last year of seminary I had the privilege of assisting Dr. José M. Ortiz in one of the Hispanic Ministries department's classes. The Hispanic Ministries boat was a secure vessel that had enabled me to return with a humble contribution for the new travelers.

Presently, I am a church planter in Southern California. The vision of a bilingual-Anabaptist-Mennonite ministry is a reality in my life; there are millions who need reconciliation with our God and Savior Jesus Christ. I pray that God will continue to strengthen our church with visions of love, grace and mercy for us and for all the nations on earth.

Allow me to summarize God's vision for Menno-Hispanics in one phrase: "Let there be light," and there was Hispanic Ministries.

Student perspective

More than a major

By Mariá Tijerina

I have been involved with the Hispanic Ministries department since the program began in 1978. I was the first bilingual secretary, serving for two-and-a-half years. Hispanic Ministries is more than a major for me; it is my life.

The department has meant a lot to me. I believe it has produced good spiritual leaders and pastors. The program has a unique and special mission to fulfill, and I am privileged to say that I have returned to become a full-time student. I am a sophomore with two majors: one in Hispanic Ministries and the other in social work.

My husband, Jacob Tijerina, an '81 graduate of Goshen College, also returned to this area to attend Associated Mennonite Biblical Seminaries for his M.Div. degree. After graduating we hope to find a place with the Mission Board or Mennonite Central Committee. We want to share our gifts with the Hispanic church.

A teacher and pastor

By German Carrasco

I was born in La Paz, Bolivia. At age 13 or 14 I had a strong desire to be active in the ministry. After high school, I studied in a Bible Institute for three years, then took a pastoral internship in a small town that needed a pastor and a schoolteacher. After several years, I felt the need for more training, so I went to school for three years and got my teaching degree.

Once I had my teaching diploma, I worked two jobs: teaching in the evangelical school in the morning and teaching in the public school in the afternoon. At night, I studied accounting at the university. During the summer, I studied at the biblical seminary in Santa Cruz. Eventually, I became the director of the evangelical school and served as director for 10 years.

In 1979, I married Ruth Nice, who was an MCC nurse in Santa Cruz. She introduced me to Anabaptist beliefs. In 1983, we moved to Moline, Ill., and joined the Davenport (Iowa) Mennonite congregation pastored by Mac Bustos. As I learned more about the Mennonite Church, I was especially interested in its teachings on non-violence. José Ortiz invited me to enter the Hispanic Ministries program.

I would like to teach and work in a Mennonite church. Eventually, I want to return to Latin America where there is a need and a desire for the Gospel.

Interested in peace

By Julio Pérez

I was born and raised in Puerto Rico in an evangelical Christian home. As a child, I always admired the pastor of my church. This admiration developed into a dream to serve the church. In my late teens I felt called to the pastorate. When I was 21, I trained as a plumber so that I could serve as a pastor in the evenings. I was ordained by the Christian Assembly of God Church, and I have worked as a pastor for 15 years.

I became acquainted with the Mennonite Church through the influence of Gladys Widmer, well-known Mennonite missionary in Puerto Rico. I was licensed and ordained by the Lancaster Mennonite Conference in 1985.

After I complete the two-year Hispanic Ministries program, I want to help Hispanic Mennonites better understand the peace teachings of the church. I want Mennonite Hispanics to understand who they are as Mennonites, to discover their Mennonite identity. I want to be available as a leader to teach my people.

I felt called

By Jorge Camacho

I am a native of Aibonito, Puerto Rico, where I often visited the Mennonite Church. My family moved from our rural area of Puerto Rico to New York City when I was in my early teens. When I was 15, I dropped out of school, at my father's insistence, to work in a factory.

In the city I learned English, but I also picked up a lifestyle that included alcohol and drug abuse. I married in 1970 and in 1976 my wife María and I moved to Goshen, where my parents lived.

As time passed, I felt more and more guilty. A friend of mine belonged to the Hispanic Mennonite congregation in Goshen, the "Iglesia del Buen Pastor." I needed a miracle of liberation, and on Jan. 6, 1981, I allowed the Lord to make that miracle happen in my life.

Six months after my conversion, the congregation asked me to be the treasurer. Later, I became a member of the church council and then chairperson of the church council. When the need arose for a pastor in 1985-86, I was asked to be a part of the ministerial team and eventually became one of the interim pastors. I realized that God was calling me to be a pastor.

I want to reach out to those who are searching for God. With God's help, they can grow as I am growing.

Roman and Marianna Reiff Stutzman '38 have recently moved to Goshen. They are retiring after living 15 years in Philadelphia, Pa., and for 20 years previous to that, in Kansas City, Mo.

Louise Weaver Swoveland '38, Goshen, writes: "My past 49 years since Goshen College days have lacked much of the color of many of my classmates. No foreign travels, no published books, no accomplishments of distinction. I have a great satisfaction, though, to have touched the lives of a great many children during my 31 years as a classroom teacher. I have a husband, a son, two grandsons — not a large family, but a very special one to me. Retirement since 1976 has been busy and as uneventful as the previous years, but never boring!"

Heart valve pioneer

Mark L. Smucker '71 is co-director of the Cardiac Catheterization Laboratory of the University of Virginia Medical Center. He and his colleagues at the Medical Center are among pioneers in a new method to treat damaged heart valves without surgery.

Using this procedure, known as balloon valvuloplasty, doctors insert a tiny balloon attached to a hollow tube into an artery in the patient's leg and maneuver it into place within the heart. When the balloon is inflated with a fluid, it can force open a hardened and nearly closed valve and restore its flexibility.

Led by Smucker, medical teams at the Medical Center have had a high success rate in the past 18 months, performing dozens of aortic balloon valvuloplasties.

This method is a welcome alternative to many patients who would otherwise face open heart surgery. In November, the University of Virginia and 21 other medical research centers will begin a study sponsored by the National Institutes of Health.

"In the NIH study, participating centers will share their experiences to assess balloon valvuloplasty and determine how it may be made even more effective," said Smucker. "In addition to the aortic valve procedure, the study will look at mitral valvuloplasty."

Smucker's teams have received considerable recognition in the past two years as they develop new and alternative methods of treating heart diseases.

Speakers address national issues

For many people, the month of November usually means Thanksgiving and an abundance of good food. For the GC community, the month of November also meant an abundance of good speakers.

Alice M. Rivlin, senior economist and former director of the Congressional Budget Office, opened the month Nov. 4-5 as part of the Frank and Betty Jo Yoder Public Affairs Lecture Series. Rivlin called the U.S. budget deficit one of the nation's biggest economic problems and one of the "most fixable." The stock-market crash and the budget-deficit negotiations made Americans more aware of the economy, giving politicians a rare opportunity to level with their constituents, she said. "Americans are ready for some grown-up talk about the economy."

The economist favors excise taxes on alcohol, tobacco and gasoline to generate increased revenue and cuts in defense spending and in agricultural and transportation subsidies. She also believes the budget should be drawn up every two years, instead of annually, and that the President's Council of Economic Advisors, the Office of Management and the Budget and the Department of the Treasury should be merged.

Alumnus Robert Detweiler '59 spoke Nov. 10-11 as the S.A. Memorial Lecturer. Titled "Is Faith a Plot?" his lecture focused on the emerging recognition of narrative and storytelling as "a way of thinking, on par with scientific discourse."

"Narrative is blurring the difference between the old categories of truth and fiction," Detweiler said. Previously, "our reliance on analytical thinking alone had led us to view truth-finding as merely fact-finding."

Christians should ask themselves "how does a Christian community, or any believers' community, express its sense of an ending these days. Our believers' community must work to fashion stories to live by."

Detweiler is director of graduate studies at Emory University's Graduate Institute of the Liberal Arts. His speech was inspired by his research for a forthcoming book, Breaking the Fall: Religious Readings of Contemporary Fiction.

The Division of Nursing sponsored a campus visit Nov. 11-12 by Sister Janet Gottschalk, R.N., an international consultant on health care. Besides speaking on justice and health care and the political situations in the Philippines and Central America, she attended a prayer service for peace. Sister Gottschalk witnessed a massacre in the Philippines in January, 1987, and was an international observer for a recent peaceful repatriation of 4,500 El Salvadoran refugees.

"Justice is related to health care. It is related in so basic a way that, without it, health care, and even more so medical care, is only a luxury," she said. "I have come to believe that one of the best ways to work as a health professional is to do everything possible to change the unjust structures in our world community, those structures that cause the needless illness and death of so many millions."

Rivlin

Another alumnus, Owen Gingerich '51, spoke Nov. 17-18. A professor of astronomy and the history of science at Harvard University, Gingerich said that science is a method of looking at the world, not a belief system.

"Science is, by its very nature, God-less," he said. "That doesn't mean science is anti-God or atheistic. It merely means that science attempts to answer the question of the 'how' of the universe, and it has virtually nothing to say about the 'who,' the designer or creator.

"Science today is not something that finds absolute truth, but simply gets up a picture of the universe that hangs together," Gingerich added. "It's very powerful in making predictions, very powerful in its understanding of things, but it doesn't tell us how things absolutely have to be. Science cannot ever rule out the miraculous."

Charles C. Keller, the president of Rotary International and son of the late Goshen College professor of English Isaac Keller, spoke Nov. 30. Promoting world peace is one of the primary goals of the one million-member organization he heads, Keller said.

"The simple truth is that the call to peacemaking does not fall only to the most powerful nations and the most visible leaders. There is an aching need for men and women of peace in every walk of life," he said. "True peace is built at the grassroots level and reinforced by just and compassionate law."

Rounding out the month of outstanding speakers was Dr. Hugo Murillo, eminent Costa Rican historian. Sponsored by the Frank and Betty Jo Yoder Public Affairs Lecture Series, Dr. Murillo spoke on the prospects for the success of the Central American peace plan proposed by Costa Rican president Oscar Arias. He believes the plan can succeed.

"All five Central American nations, despite their sharp political differences, now have an interest in making peace," he said. "The proposal is realistic. It includes concrete measures, timetables and monitoring devices to guide the pacification process. Yet the terms of the accords are vague enough to accommodate the different parties and factions in conflict. Perhaps the greatest advantage of the plan is that it is a Central American initiative, not one dictated from outside."

Other speakers heard on campus this fall included Prof. Gunther Hänse, Friedrich Schiller University, Jena, German Democratic Republic; Dr. Rene Padilla, a Latin American theologian and pastor; the Rev. Clyde Weaver, Elgin, Ill., a consultant on U.S.-U.S.S.R. relations, and alumni Bruce Bishop '80 and Brenda Stoltzfus '81. Bishop spoke about his participation in the Moscow-to-Leningrad peace walk in summer, 1987, and Stoltzfus spoke about her work with prostitutes in Olongapo, the Philippines.

Basketball season underway

The Maple Leafs men's basketball team has struggled to a 2-7 record early in the season. It is a young team with only one junior and one senior on the roster. The Leafs have played everyone tough so far, as evidenced by the fact that in every game except one they have been within five points during the final minute of play.

Kevin Richie, Kouts, Ind., has been the Leafs leading offensive threat. The junior transfer from Glen Oaks Community College, Centreville, Mich., is averaging 19.1 points per game and is shooting 54 percent from the field, including 21 of 39 from three-point range. Sophomore Bob Nemtuda, Crown Point, Ind., is the team's second leading scorer with a 14.9 average, and is the leading rebounder with a 6.7 average.

The Goshen women have had an up and down 3-3 season so far, highlighted by their first win of the Goshen Invitational Tournament. In that tournament, Goshen beat Olivet 74-63 in the semifinal, and then scored GC's first victory over Defiance 64-53. Senior Dawn Gerber, Brutus, Mich., was selected to the All-Tournament team.

Gerber leads the team with a 18.0 scoring average and a 9.0 rebounding average. She has already broken the GC career rebounding record and has an excellent shot at breaking the career scoring record. Freshman Kathy Mast, Wooster, Ohio, is the team's second leading scorer with a 10.0 average.

Three GC players all-academic

Dan Wenger, Jeffrey Smucker and Kenton Longenecker have been named to the 35-player 1987 NAIA men's soccer academic All-American team.

Wenger, a senior from Lancaster, Pa., maintains a 3.93 grade-point average in economics. Smucker, a senior from Bird-in-Hand, Pa., has a 3.87 in interdisciplinary studies and Longenecker, a senior from New Holland, Pa., has a 3.64 in physics and math.

Fall teams post winning marks

The GC Maple Leaf teams finished a fine fall season with a combined record of 56-33-2, a 62.6 winning percentage. Every team had a record above .500. Disappointing losses in both field hockey and soccer dashed hopes of advancing beyond the District-21 Tournament, but overall it was a good season. A total of 17 Goshen athletes received either all-district or all-conference honors.

Strong individual performances throughout the year characterized the Maple Leaf cross country season. Dave Little, a sophomore from Elkhart, Ind., and Aletha Stahl, a junior from Harrisonburg, Va., both had outstanding seasons individually. "Only one sophomore in GC history has ever surpassed the 26:57 Dave ran at the Manchester Invitational, and Aletha is the first woman in GC history to run three sub-20:00 races," said assistant coach Lyle Miller. Stahl captured all-conference and all-district honors, while Little and freshman Rochelle Krause, Bristol, Ind., were also named to the all-conference team.

"The fourth-place finish at the district meet was a high point of the season for us," said coach John Ingold in wrapping up the tennis season. "One of our goals was to improve on last year's record, and we went from 4-5 to 6-5." Junior Mike Stoltzfus was named to the all-conference team and the 12-member all-district team.

Goshen's final record in field hockey was 10-7. Goshen players named to the all-district team were seniors Chris Landis, Lancaster, Pa., (for the third year in a row), and Vanessa King, Gordonville, Pa. Those on the Hoosier Conference for Women all-conference team were Landis, King, freshman Cindy Harnish, Willow Street, Pa., and senior Regina Miller, Mason, Mich. Coach Linda Shetler was named District Coach of the Year.

The regular season record for the women's tennis team was 6-3 and 3-0 in the conference. GC placed ninth out of 12 in the district tourney. Junior Susan Hunsberger and sophomore Ingrid Hess, both of Goshen, were named to the all-conference team.

After a 10-16 season in 1986, this year's volleyball squad posted a 22-14 final record and a second-place finish in the Hoosier Conference for Women. Senior Karen Yoder, Elkhart, Ind., was named to the all-district and all-conference teams. Senior Dawn Gerber, Brutus, Mich., also made the all-conference team.

After opening with two losses and one tie, the GC soccer team put together an eight-game winning streak en route to a final record of 12-4-2. In the Mid Central Conference the Leafs were a perfect 4-0. It was Goshen's ninth conference championship since joining the MCC in 1970.

Five seniors were named to the all-conference team. They were Darin Derstine, Elkhart, Ind., Dan Liechty, Goshen, Kenton Longenecker, New Holland, Pa., Jeff Smucker, Bird-in-Hand, Pa., Dan Wenger, Lancaster, Pa. Derstine was named to the National Soccer Coaches Association's second team.

Hispanic faculty plays many roles

By Lois Landis Kurowski

Many people are aware of some of Goshen College's outstanding features, such as the international education requirement and the high acceptance rate of students applying to medical school. However, few realize that GC's faculty is outstanding in another way — in the number of Hispanics on the faculty.

Nationally, Hispanics are woefully underrepresented on college and university faculties. Only 1.8 per cent of college and university professors and 1.6 percent of administrators are Hispanics, although 7.9 percent of the U.S. population is Hispanic.

GC's Hispanic representation is important because of the growth in the Hispanic Mennonite Church and the growth in the Hispanic population in the U.S. in general. As the church grows, the Hispanic Ministries program becomes even more important as a training ground for church leaders. The Hispanic faculty members, besides providing academically valid training for Hispanic church leaders, also serve as models of Hispanic church leaders and scholars for Hispanic students.

For non-Hispanic students, the presence of so many Hispanic faculty members gives them the opportunity to see Hispanics in roles that destroy the stereotypes of Hispanics that students see in the dominant society. Because Hispanics are the fastest-growing minority group in the U.S., non-Hispanic students probably will encounter Hispanics much more often in their lives than did previous generations. It is estimated that by the year 2010 Hispanics will make up at least 11 percent of the population. Through their encounters with Hispanic faculty members, students gain an appreciation for Hispanics' contributions to the church and society.

The full-time Hispanic faculty are Rafael Falcón, associate professor of Spanish who chairs the foreign language department, and José M. Ortiz, associate professor of Hispanic Ministries and director of the Hispanic Ministries program. The part-time members are Elías Acosta, Elizabeth Soto and Daniel Schipani.

Ortiz believes that GC is "privileged" to have so many Hispanic faculty members. The presence of so many Hispanics on the faculty of a Christian college is important, he believes, because of trends in the majors Hispanic college students are choosing. Hispanic college students increasingly are majoring in business; the proportion choosing service professions such as social work and education has declined greatly. Just as Goshen College offers its students an alternative to the materialistic philosophy dominant in U.S. culture, GC's Hispanic faculty members are role models (for Hispanic students) of Hispanics who have chosen to serve their people through education, Ortiz said.

It is important for more Hispanics to go into education and other helping professions, both to serve the Hispanic population better and to make human-service institutions more responsive to Hispanic needs, he believes.

Elizabeth Soto, Rafael Falcón, José Ortiz

Also important is the fact that the Hispanic faculty members work actively with many Hispanic congregations. Many Hispanic professionals economically exploit the Hispanic community but culturally live in the Anglo community, Ortiz said. "Our faculty hasn't lost touch with the mainstream of Hispanic life — as members of the Hispanic Ministries program, we cannot lose touch with it."

Just before Christmas, for instance, Ortiz traveled to Calgary, Alberta, to negotiate Spanish classes for churches there. He then went directly to Salem, Ore., to conduct workshops for churches there along with Elizabeth Soto.

Hispanic faculty also are living affirmations to other Mennonites that the church's evangelistic efforts are valuable and productive, Ortiz said. "We are part of the harvest," he said. "We grew up in the church."

Rafael Falcón also feels positive about being on the GC faculty. "It's nice to be Hispanic," he said. "Sometimes people are attracted to Hispanics because they're seen as a little exotic." Although Falcón, Ortiz and Soto are Puerto Ricans, Acosta is from the Dominican Republic and Schipani is from Argentina. This diversity helps both Hispanics and non-Hispanics appreciate the diversity of Hispanic culture. Falcón also believes that the Hispanic presence on the faculty helps "provide an awareness of what's going on in Latin America and an awareness of the frustration of being a minority" among other faculty members.

He also serves as a role model for Hispanic students. Like other Hispanics in the U.S., he tries to achieve a healthy balance between retaining his Puerto Rican culture and adopting some U.S. customs. Because his wife Christine is a Yoder from Iowa, their sons Bryan and Brent have two cultural legacies from which to draw. However, the Falcóns have to make a concerted effort to teach their sons Puerto Rican culture because North American culture is so pervasive. They hope to spend Rafael's next sabbatical in Puerto Rico so that the boys can improve their Spanish and get to know their Puerto Rican grandparents better.

Falcón also has served as a role model in a surprising way. When he and Christine led the SST units in Costa Rica in 1983-84, the Costa Rican host families were surprised to see that a North American institution had sent a Hispanic in a position of responsibility. On the morning the host families picked up their students, Falcón overheard one father asking where the North American's (Christine's) husband was. He obviously was expecting the other SST leader to be tall, blonde and blue-eyed, Falcón said, and was very surprised to discover that he was short, dark and Hispanic!

It's not hard to tell where Elizabeth Soto's from — she has a large Puerto Rican flag hanging on her office wall. Trained as a health educator at the University of Puerto Rico, she felt the call to continue her education at the Seminario Evangelio and later Associated Mennonite Biblical Seminaries. She now divides her time between Goshen College and the Mennonite Board of Education, where she directs the High-Aim program and is associate director of the office of minority education. At MBE, she writes articles, does promotional activities, raises funds and travels to recruit students for High-Aim.

At GC, she teaches in the Hispanic Ministries program (this year, "Introduction to the Old Testament"), gives workshops in Hispanic congregations and counsels Hispanic students. In fall, 1987, her travels have kept her on the road three weekends a month. She visited seven Mennonite high schools and traveled to Lancaster, Laurelville, Pittsburgh and Scottdale, Pa.; Harrisonburg, Va.; New York City; Kalona, Iowa; Corpus Christi, Texas, and Salem, Ore.

Joining the GC faculty in 1986, she was a little apprehensive about teaching in the Hispanic Ministries program. "I was working with two factors against me," Soto said. "First, I'm a woman, and second, I would be teaching men older than me."

However, by being assertive and being open to her students, she was able to win their respect. "The students and I share a common experience," she said. "I have learned to meet them where they are in their faith journeys. In my class, we are raising questions of faith and answering questions of faith. I need to consider where they're coming from."

She carries the same attitude into her counseling. She finds that the three groups she counsels — Hispanic Ministries students, international students, and Hispanic students not majoring in Hispanic Ministries — have different needs and problems.

The Hispanic Ministries students tend to be older, are not as fluent in English, and are very serious about their studies. They sometimes feel lost on a campus where most other students are younger, Anglo, and lack a sense of urgency in their studies. The international students need help in dealing with North American culture.

The other Hispanic students, often first- or second-generation native-born U.S. citizens, are struggling with identity questions, such as "Who am I as a Mennonite?," Soto said. They also need help choosing careers, trying to discern where they can best serve their people. Some even struggle with the question of where to take SST, because some are eager to live in a country where they can be immersed in Hispanic culture, while others would rather go to a non-Hispanic country, she said.

Overall, however, Hispanic students are well integrated into life at Goshen College, Soto said. She is the adviser of the Latin Student Union, and "sometimes it is hard to get the LSU together" because Hispanic students are involved in so many other activities. She sees one of the LSU's functions as providing a "Hispanic family atmosphere" at times when students need it, such as Thanksgiving. She hosted a Thanksgiving dinner at her home this year for Hispanic students who couldn't go home for the holiday.

Soto finds her work with Hispanic congregations also very satisfying and exciting. The congregations are "fast-growing" and now want to be self-supporting, not to depend so much on the Mennonite Board of Missions. They want to have leaders who are well prepared, she said.

Soto would like to prepare herself further. Although she definitely plans to teach at GC through at least 1988-89, she would like to pursue a doctoral degree, perhaps in anthropology with a concentration in Latin American and women's issues. She also would like to pastor a congregation and has "a dream — a vision that's always been postponed — to serve my people in Latin America."

Other part-time faculty members are Elías Acosta and Daniel S. Schipani. Acosta '84, will teach preaching and communications in the winter trimester. The course will include both traditional instruction in preaching and also instruction in audio and video production. He is the first graduate of the Hispanic Ministries program to return as a teacher in the program.

Schipani is also a professor of Christian education and personality at Goshen Biblical Seminary. He taught a course in Christian education during the fall trimester.

Schipani has written eight books, including his latest work, Los Niños y el Reino (Children and the Reign of God), an international and inter-Mennonite effort in teacher training and curriculum development for Spanish-speaking congregations in the Americas.

Hispanic Ministries benefit from agency cooperation

By Victor Stoltzfus

The Hispanic Ministries program at Goshen College is training a new generation of leaders for Hispanic Mennonite Churches. It is an inspiring example of four church agencies sharing people and program resources.

The Mennonite Board of Education at Elkhart provides funds, counsel from Associate Secretary Orville Yoder and part-time instructional services from Elizabeth Soto. Elías Acosta, a Goshen College communication alumnus, works for the Mennonite Board of Missions. He helps to produce videotapes on biblical studies, pastoral counseling and church administration and thus extends the reach of the Hispanic Ministries program beyond campus to homes and congregations. Professor Daniel Schipani of Goshen Biblical Seminary teaches part time. Goshen College provides academic space and support services. Notable among the college resources is English language instruction and the growing Hispanic church collection of the Mennonite Historical Library.

The Hispanic Mennonite Church in North America, 1932-1982, by Professor Rafael Falcón, is available to English readers in a translation by Professor Ronald Collins (Herald Press). After reading this history and visiting with Professor José Ortiz for an update on Hispanic Mennonites, I discovered an interesting pattern. Our Hispanic brothers and sisters are struggling with the American experience in our time much like Swiss and German immigrants did in an earlier era.

One issue is language. The transition between Spanish and English in Hispanic churches today resembles the earlier transition from German to English. Many Hispanic congregations are using Spanish for preaching and English for youth Sunday school classes and some music.

Historically, both have been uprooted by migration and gradually made their way to permanent settlements. As Ortiz explains the church's Hispanic ministry, it has moved "from serving an Exodus people to ministry for home life and community building."

Both groups also have known times of privation and social stigma. Now Hispanics are entering the professions through education in a pattern familiar to earlier immigrants.

Both Anglos and Hispanics are gaining from the spiritual bonding among our peoples within the Mennonite tradition. Hispanics have a place in Mennonite church organization, an important symbol of identity and inclusion. Their concerns are represented to the General Board of the Mennonite Church by the Concilio Nacional de Iglesias Menonitas Hispanas and its executive secretary, Samuel Hernández. Some Hispanic congregations are assisted by mission giving. Bilingual and bicultural Anglos such as Professor Ron Collins of Goshen College and church planter Allan Yoder in Los Angeles have played key roles in helping both groups understand each other.

Majority-group Mennonites also gain from coming to know and appreciate the Hispanic community within the church. Ortiz reminds us that privileged people are tempted to smugness, to having all the answers, to living in a "Disneyland" world of false securities. He believes the four ways of writing about the Lord in the Gospels should open our minds to varied witnesses to Christ in our own time, including Hispanic congregations.

The Mennonite Hispanic geography in North America includes congregations in 16 states, the District of Columbia and three Canadian provinces. Hispanic Mennonites are concentrated in California, Texas, Pennsylvania, New York, Illinois and Florida. They have come from Mexico, Puerto Rico, Central America and Chile.

Beyond the close circle of the church family, we should be aware that Hispanics in America are the fastest-growing ethnic group. They have $70 billion of purchasing power. Politically and culturally Anglos will not understand this country if they are ignorant of their Hispanic neighbors.

The Hispanic Ministries program at Goshen College is an important example of college and church partnership in education for lay and ordained ministry. It is a model of cooperation and wise stewardship of church resources. We believe it will make an important contribution to "Vision 95," the churchwide campaign for increased growth and giving among Mennonites.

Paying for college

Lori Nofziger, a freshman from Pettisville, Ohio, has a campus job calling prospective students for the admissions office. She works with Doug Liechty Caskey, assistant director of admissions.

About this issue

This issue of the Bulletin outlines some of the creative ways families are financing a college education.

The suggestions of Walter Schmucker, director of student financial aid at GC, are relevant, not only for students interested in Goshen College, but for those thinking of any college.

However, in such a discussion, it's important to understand the role that cost should play in selecting a college.

In recent years, cost has become an increasingly important factor when students and their parents look at their college options, according to Rich Gerig, director of admissions at GC.

Fortunately for students, we live in a buyer's market. Comptetition for students has forced colleges to be more responsive in their pricing and the financial aid they offer.

Unfortunately, the competitiveness and emphasis on financial aid has meant that many students simply shop for the best financial deal, rather than trying to determine where the "fit" between themselves and the college is best.

"Even in these buyer's-market times, financial aid should be seen only as an enabler that can help students pick the college that is right for them," Gerig says.

To determine whether they belong at a particular school, Gerig suggests that students look first at their own values and goals. Then they should compare these interests to what various schools offer in such areas as curriculum, religious climate, social life, job-placement services and quality of instruction.

In the end, choosing what seems to be a low-priced school can be a waste of money, if the school doesn't give you what you want.

"You don't want to end up at a place where you don't fit," Gerig says, "because no matter what you're paying, it's throwing your money away."

Paying for college — blending scholarships, loans, work and savings

By Karen Kurtz

Families with college-bound students need a balanced perspective about paying for college these days.

That's the view of Walter Schmucker, director of student financial aid at Goshen College.

First, families need to have a clearly thought-out strategy. Other than purchasing a home and providing for the parents' retirement, the financial investment a family makes toward college education might be the largest one it will ever make.

Second, they should know that there are literally thousands of sources of financial aid for education, each varying in what it provides. "Take advantage of the more than $20 billion dollars worth of financial aid that is available and awarded every year," said Schmucker.

Third, they should realize that application deadlines are important. The application process can be complicated, but without applying they will not be considered for assistance.

How are present Goshen College students planning for college and coping with the financial-aid maze?

Kevin Bacher, a senior from Oregon, has paid much of his college expenses through scholarships ranging from the National Merit Corporation's one-year finalist award to the college's Menno Simons Scholarship and several endowed scholarships for which he qualified.

Judith Bacher, Kevin's mother, said some of his Goshen College endowed scholarships have been a "pleasant surprise." One of Kevin's professors suggested that he apply for the Minter Scholarship, which is open to environmental or field biology majors. This award eased Kevin's college costs another $1,000. He has also received the endowed S. T. Miller Scholarship, an $800 award given to a natural science major, twice during his undergraduate years. By combining these awards with federal student loans, a $500 grant from his home congregation, his earnings from a summer job, and work-study while enrolled, Kevin has been able to meet his expenses.

Jeremy Kropf, Elkhart, Ind., qualified for a full tuition scholarship to Wabash College (Ind.), but he thought the atmosphere at Goshen College more "compatible with his world view." Jeremy's parents had not set any money aside for college costs, believing "their kids would appreciate college education more if they pay for it themselves."

Jeremy explored financial aid options on his own, discovering various ways to pay for his tuition. The Kropfs pay his room and board expenses, taking out a renewable Parent Loans for Undergraduate Students (PLUS) through their local bank. And with the help of summer earnings, a scholarship from the college, a grant from his home church and a private loan, Jeremy has been able to put together enough funds for his college expenses this year.

Shane Hartzler, Phoenix, Ariz., began to save for college with the money he earned delivering the Arizona Republic. When he decided to attend GC, he and his parents agreed to divide college costs in half, each paying for two years through savings. Shane also received the Eugene C. Pulliam Memorial Award from the Arizona Republic, a four-year scholarship worth $4,000 given to outstanding paper carriers.

Scholarships and grants

Of the three main types of financial aid — scholarships, grants and work — prospective students view scholarships as the most desirable. A scholarship is "free money," an outright gift that does not need to be repaid. Scholarships are primary awards that colleges use to recognize students for outstanding achievement and to get them to attend; recipients are chosen by the college.

Other groups also award scholarships to encourage students to pursue specific professions or just to support students in their decision to attend college.

Goshen College, for example, offers achievement scholarships to qualifying freshman, National Merit finalists, junior-college transfers and minority students. In addition, endowed and restricted scholarships are awarded according to criteria established in consultation with the donor.

Schmucker encourages families, like the Hartzlers, to investigate other sources of scholarships on their own. "We tell students to talk to their high-school guidance counselors about local community sources and their parents' employers about education benefits for dependents. Investigate books in the library, like Scholarships, Fellowships, and Loans by Feingold and Feingold (Bellman Publishing). More than 150 Mennonite churches and conferences are included in Goshen College's Assured Matching Program," he said.

Grants are another kind of "free money." While scholarships are available only to students who show proof of achievement or meet other kinds of qualifications, demonstrated financial need is the only "qualification" necessary for grants from the college and from state and federal government programs.

Named after Sen. Claiborne Pell (D-R.I.) who sponsored the legislation, the Pell Grant is the largest federal grant program. To qualify for any federal financial aid, including the Guaranteed Student Loan (GSL), students are required to apply first for a Pell Grant by completing the Financial Aid Form or another federally approved need analysis document.

Like the Pell Grant, Supplemental Education Opportunity Grants (SEOG) are gifts to students with financial need. Unlike the Pell Grant, though, these funds are allocated directly to the college for administering to students with the greatest need. In 1987-88, Goshen College disbursed $150,700 to 180 students through SEOG.

Loans

Taking out loans, as the Kropfs have done, is another way for families to help ease college costs.

Guaranteed Student Loans (GSL) are designed to be repaid over a 10-year period, with an eight-percent interest rate for the first four years and a 10 percent rate for the other six years. On the basis of demonstrated need, freshman and sophomores can have $2,625; juniors and seniors can receive as much as $4,000 per year.

Perkins Loans are another federal program that is campus-based and administered. The federal government funds 90 percent of this loan, and GC funds the other 10 percent. For first-time borrowers, repayment on the Perkins Loan begins nine months after graduation. The repayment term is 10 years. Students can receive a maximum of $4,500 during the first two years of college, and more if they continue to qualify and stay in school. At Goshen College, Perkins Loans total $262,575 for the current academic year.

The newest government loan program is the Parent Loans for Undergraduate Students (PLUS). Through PLUS, parents can borrow up to $4,000 annually for each student in college, regardless of need, up to a maxium of $20,000 per child for the child's college career. Repayment of this loan begins 60 days after receiving the money; the bank arranges the length of repayment time. This year 18 GC parents are participants in PLUS, with nine students borrowing cash from its sister program, Supplemental Loans for Students (SLS).

Work and savings

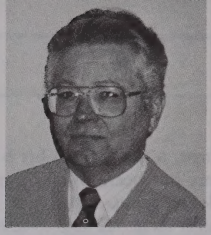
The final pieces in the financial-aid puzzle are work and savings. Savings can be either the family's savings or the student's personal savings from employment, and it usually includes a combination of both.

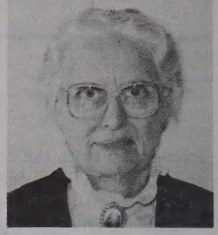
Under the College-Work-Study Program, about half of GC students hold jobs on-campus. The earnings from these hourly jobs (at minimum wage) help pay school bills or buy school supplies. One student said, "Once I found out what was available, I took campus jobs specifically in line with what I wanted to do after I graduated. It helped me keep up with school bills and living costs, and the experience I received enhanced my resume."

Summer jobs are also important sources of income for students. "Get a summer job before your freshmen year in college," advised Schmucker. "The Congressional Methodology Need Analysis Formula expects a student to provide 70 percent of their base-year income or $700 for freshman, $900 for all others."

When all the dollars are added up, the financial aid puzzle becomes a complete picture. College-bound students round out financial aid packages in various creative ways. Kevin Bacher found his academic interests provided scholarships. Jeremy Kropf and his parents use loans and other financial aids to help ease college costs. Shane Hartzler found his part-time employment paid off when he was ready to enroll in college years later.

"Somewhere out there money (a scholarship, grant, loan, or job) is available to help pay for a college education," said Schmucker. "Taking initiative, meeting financial-aid deadlines and searching for appropriate financial aid sources is up to you."





Education is a good buy

By Edgar M. Clemens

As a young father, I was sure it would be impossible to send all of our children to college. I remember how I hated to open a magazine because it always seemed to open to some article or advertisement that admonished, "Save now for your children's education."

I admit fantasizing about how I might get the extra cash to cover the education of our seven children. I remember teaching my high-school chemistry lab, where my students did an experiment that changed a copper wire into various copper solutions. In the experiment they added zinc and sulfuric acid and copper came out of the solution. As I walked around the lab, I'd say, "Wow, isn't that neat." But in my mind I was thinking, "If only it was gold coming out of that solution!"

We're convinced that education is a good buy, and that parents should encourage their children to develop a saleable skill of some kind. So the Clemens children borrowed money, and we filled out the Financial Aid Forms necessary to determine how much money the bank could lend.

The children had jobs on campus. Fredric, our oldest, had the job of manager-trainer of the Goshen soccer and basketball teams. He liked what the job entailed so much that he is now a physical therapist.

College is not for everybody, and Goshen College is not for everybody. But we are thankful it has been available for our children.

There are good reasons why a Mennonite might attend Indiana University or Penn State or some other "secular" college or university, but finances should not be the determining factor.

Edgar M. Clemens is a high-school chemistry teacher in Ithaca, N.Y.

Sending 12 children to college

By Helen Kaufmann

After I graduated from high school, I had a great desire to continue my education at Goshen College, but was unable to do so. Later, I had the opportunity to attend the six-week Winter Bible School. It was there that I met my future husband, John.

We had such a positive experience at Goshen that when we had children of our own, we envisioned them also attending Goshen College. We had planned to establish a savings account for that purpose. But when our 12th child arrived and the oldest one was already a freshman at Goshen College, we knew that vision would never materialize.

Even though we were a growing farm family with limited resources, we did not want this to prevent our children from attending Goshen College. The cost, in comparison with state colleges, was never a major consideration. We believed that the benefits and influences of a Christian college were well worth the higher cost.

So how did we finance their education? With the help of scholarships, government loans and loans from their aunt, Alma Kaufmann '35, they were able to attend Goshen College.

Alma was a public-school teacher for many years. Almost all of our children had the privilege of being a student in her classroom. I'm sure her love for Goshen College was influential in their decision to attend. Because Alma never married and lived on the farmstead with us, she considered our children hers. We truly appreciated her help in making our vision a reality.

The '70s were difficult. I became a widow in 1970 and then farm values increased to the point where our children no longer qualified for government loans. So we relied more heavily on Alma's help.

All of our children were able to attend Goshen College and eight of them are graduates. Most of them went on to do graduate work, but the solid educational and social experiences of Goshen College were beneficial to all.

Helen Kaufmann lives on a farm in Tiskilwa, Ill.

Financial planning for college

Financial experts suggest parents begin saving for a college education as early as possible after a child is born. Some creative examples:

1. Purchase a rental property and designate the income and any appreciation in value for your children's college education.
2. Give a crisp $100 bill to your children each year on their birthday and help them deposit it in an income-earning account. Explain that this is a special account for their college education.
3. Encourage grandparents to establish a college education account for their grandchildren.
4. Prepare a family budget and stick to it. Designate a specified amount each week, month or year for college education and set that amount aside in an income-earning account.
5. Contact an investment counselor and purchase a zero-coupon bond in your child's name.
6. Invest funds, in your child's name, in growth mutual funds, certificates of deposit or single-premium annuities.

Under the Tax Revision Act, a child's interest and dividends may be taxed; however, it will normally be at a lower rate than if parents kept the funds in their own account. And even though it may be taxed, the net result will be better than if you had not saved!

Paying for college on your own

By David Godshall

Even if you don't have a lot of money, you can still afford college. Money is really one of the smaller issues you need to deal with in deciding whether to attend college and even which college you would like to attend.

My parents were missionaries in Mexico when my brothers and I were born. They decided early in their marriage to strive for a simple life rather than trying to achieve financial success. As a result, they could not contribute much towards putting their four children through college.

However, my older brother just graduated from Goshen College and is now attending graduate school, I am currently a junior, and my younger brother just started at Hesston College. Yet my parents haven't paid any part of our tuitions. So how can we afford college?

Simple. We got grants, took out loans and earned what money we could. We got the grants based on financial need from the government, other institutions, and the colleges themselves. We took out loans through special educational programs whereby we won't have to start paying them back until half a year after we are out of college. The money we earned over the summer, along with the money we earn by working about 10 hours a week during the school year, has always been enough to make ends meet nicely.

David Godshall is a junior computer science major from Elkhart, Ind.

Relationships have been rewarding

By René Horst

I have come to see my choice to attend a Mennonite college as a step of faith. Consultations with friends and advisers during my senior year in high school did not give me a clear reason for coming to Goshen, although the music program was very attractive.

Of course, having Goshen alumni for parents undoubtedly influenced my decision. It is only in retrospect, however, that I am able to list specific reasons that have rewarded my choice to stay at Goshen.

The cost of a private college is hard to justify unless one achieves specific goals that make the investment worthwhile. I would list as my greatest rewards the close personal relationships with fellow students and professors, unique opportunities for cross-cultural interaction and music-making, both in chamber groups and in the community. I also see emphasis at Goshen on building God's kingdom by helping others.

Above all I value the challenge to my faith and intellect, as well as the ethical values upheld by the college. Students often complain about the rules, but many of us will eventually want to have lifestyles along these lines, and college is a good place to start.

I am grateful to Goshen for the financial aid that has been available to me to make my college education less expensive. The investment wlll continue to be worthwhile.

René Horst is a junior music and history major. He grew up in Argentina.

Working your way through college is still an option

By Linda Metzger

I'm getting through college with a combination of financial aid and work. In the process I'm learning how little it takes to live on, if you're really careful about what you spend.

I decided to go to college after working eight years as a medical assistant. Although I had saved money during the time I was working, it wasn't available to me when I decided to return to college. So I had no savings to draw on to pay for a private school like Manchester College, which is where I wanted to start my nursing program.

I chose Manchester because I'd grown up there, and my father worked at the college. However, I was too old to be eligible for the normal discount for children of the faculty or staff. Still I was able to manage financially by living at home, working part time and receiving some help from my parents.

In 1986 I transferred to Goshen. I wanted to continue my nursing program at a small school, but again I had the problem of higher cost than at a state school like Ball State.

Fortunately for me, the federal government changed its guidelines last year for calculating a student's financial resources if the student is over 24 and independent. When they no longer counted my parents' income as part of my assets, I became eligible for more aid.

In addition, I continued to work summers and save every penny. Now I work six to eight hours a week in the college print shop, and on weekends I work at a clinic in South Whitley, Ind. I also save several hundred dollars by living on a senior floor in the dorm because I can cook my own meals.

It hasn't been easy to manage on my own at private schools like Manchester and Goshen. Yet I believe that the quality of education I'm receiving can't be measured simply in dollars. The personal attention I receive from professors and the higher academic quality they expect have helped me become the person that I am.

Linda Metzger is a senior nursing major from North Manchester, Ind.

Scientific first for Beachy

Roger Beachy '66, professor of biology at Washington University in St. Louis, has created the world's first genetically engineered virus-resistant plant.

He and his team of research scientists have genetically altered tomato plants to resist a form of virus that causes significant crop loss throughout the world. By changing some chromosomes within the nucleus of the tomato plant's cells, this "custom-built" strain resists the damaging viral disease called tobacco-mosaic virus.

Scientists say that one value of genetically altered plants is to increase the productivity of existing tilled land. Presently, some areas experience between 40 to 80 percent crop failure each year. Using disease-resistant plants would eliminate much of the crop failure.

Congregational aid eases financial gap

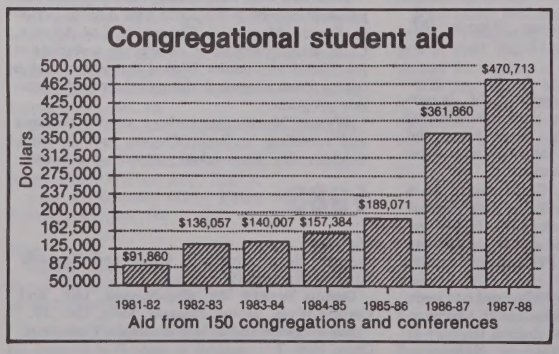
To close the gap between the cost of education at a church college and state-supported schools, more than 150 Mennonite churches have developed congregational aid plans that make colleges like Goshen more affordable for their students.

The results are encouraging. Congregations contributed more than $470,000 in aid to 465 GC students in 1987-88, according to Phil Rush, associate director of student financial aid. The average payment for each student was about $1,000. That's an increase of about 500 percent from the $92,000 congregations pledged in 1981-82.

"The program has grown substantially," Rush said. "Students benefit from having their indebtedness reduced. Some of the congregations have given much more than the $500 match available through GC's Assured Matching Program. It shows how these churches set priorities and how they feel about stewardship when they give so generously," Rush said. "First Mennonite Church in Indianapolis, for example, has committed full tuition for seven Goshen College students this year."

The Soo Hill Mennonite Chapel, Escanaba, Mich., has also made a noteworthy contribution toward the education of its students, though the church is small and the members are far from affluent. "We have high unemployment and salaries are not that great [in our area]," said Stanley Troyer, pastor of the 30-member church in Michigan's Upper Peninsula. "Yet our members are supporting five college students this year. Four of them attend Goshen College. The funds are distributed equally, about $110 to each student. And the Indiana-Michigan Conference program contributed an additional $90 each."

"This is the second year of our congregational aid program," Troyer said. "The interest and enthusiasm for it among our members is growing. We believe our church schools emphasize religion and teaching of Scripture, helping students face difficult decisions better later in life. We want a high percentage of our college-age students to stay Mennonite, giving of themselves through a life of service," he said.



The Mennonite Church of Normal (Ill.), pioneered congregational aid in 1976. Since then, they have given $400,000 to students who attend Mennonite colleges. They are currently helping four Goshen College students; their typical aid package runs from $4,000 to $6,000.

As a supplement to the congregational aid program, Goshen College has developed its Assured Matching Program that assures a matching amount up to $500. Each student in the program must be enrolled full-time for the coming school year. The congregational commitment must be made by May 1. Program matching funds may include an existing academic or achievement scholarship, endowed scholarship, tuition discount or Goshen College grant.

High school seniors will soon finalize their college choice. The congregational aid program and the Assured Matching Program at Goshen College are but two of the options available to help ease college costs.

Soccer Camp in June

Dates for the 1988 Goshen College Soccer Camp are June 13-17 for ages 13 and up and June 20-24 for ages eight to 12. Cost is $80 for day camp and $175 for overnight. Overnight camp is available to anyone 11 years and older.

Celebration of SST's 20th year

Next year (1988-89) will be the 20th year of the international-education requirement at Goshen College. The Study-Service Term (SST) has had a tremendous impact on the lives of the more than 4,000 individuals who have participated in it.

To mark the 20th anniversary of SST, Goshen College is planning a year-long celebration of international education.

The celebration will begin with a weekend that combinies Alumni Weekend, Parents Weekend and SST reunions. The celebration will also include world famous international guests and much, much more.

Alumni reunions also are planned for the five-year classes — 1943, 1948, 1953, 1958, 1963 and 1968. Persons who participated in SST from 1969 to 1988 are invited to reunions with others from their SST location.

Mark your calendars and plan now to attend the kick-off celebration, Oct. 7-9, 1988!

Sue Becher (right) presents Dawn Gerber with the game ball during special ceremonies honoring senior players at the St. Francis game Feb. 16. During her four-year career, Gerber broke Becher's GC records for most points in a game, most points in a season, most career points and most career rebounds.

Gerber sets scoring record

Dawn Gerber, a senior center from Brutus, Mich., is writing her own page in the Goshen College women's-basketball record book. Last year she set two school records and has added two more this year.

On Feb. 13 Gerber broke the GC career-scoring record in a 68-47 win over Earlham. At the end of the regular season she has 1,178 points. The old record was 1,121 points held by Sue Becher (1974-77).

Gerber scored 168 points her freshman year, 309 as a sophomore, 308 as a junior and has 393 in her senior year. Her point total this year also breaks Becher's single-season scoring record of 378.

Last year Gerber shattered the GC career-rebounding record and set the single-game scoring mark of 32 points.

GC coach Pert Shetler is quick to point out that Gerber's value to the team goes far beyond her impressive statistics. "Dawn is a true team leader, both verbally and by the example she sets on the court," Shetler said. "She has such great court awareness that she raises the level of play of everyone around her."

Led by Gerber, the Goshen women are riding the crest of a 15-game winning streak. After a slow 4-5 start, the Leafs upset Indiana Tech on Jan. 9 when Tech was the top-ranked team in the state. The victory gave the Lady Maple Leafs a winning momentum they have maintained ever since.

Statistically, Gerber leads the team in scoring with a 16.6 average and in rebounding with 10.3 per game. Freshman point guard Kathy Mast, Wooster, Ohio, is second in scoring with a 12.2 average, while sophomore Donna Porter, Elkhart, Ind., is pulling down 6.2 rebounds per game.

The Goshen men's team broke a seven-game losing streak with a 66-65 win over Marian in the final home game of the season. Marian entered the game with an 18-7 record, and had been rated second in the state for much of the season. The Leafs ended the season with a record of 6-23, and they finished 2-8 in the Mid-Central Conference.

Junior Kevin Richie, Kouts, Ind., and sophomore Bob Nemtuda, Crown Point, Ind., led the Goshen scoring attack with 15.5 and 15.3 averages, and Richie is tops in rebounding with a 6.4 average.

GC will participate in Pew Science Program

A group of six Midwestern institutions of higher education, which includes Goshen College, has received a grant of $1,127,000 from the Pew Science Program for a collaborative project to improve undergraduate education in science and mathematics. Besides GC, other members of the "cluster" are Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill.; Albion (Mich.) College; Augustana College, Rock Island, Ill.; Luther College, Decorah, Iowa; and Wheaton (Ill.) College.

The cluster received funding for four programs. The first is the Pew Science Scholars Program, in which five students from each cluster school will spend eight weeks in the summer on the Northwestern University campus, learning about modern research techniques. The Pew Science Scholars will be students between their freshman and sophomore years; each will receive a $1,500 stipend. The program will begin in summer, 1989 and continue in 1990 and 1991.

The second, the Pew Science Research Fellows program, will take place in the summers of 1990 and 1991. Five students who are sophomores or juniors will receive $2,500 stipends for working on scientific or mathematical research with a faculty member from the cluster schools. Students may work on their home campus or at another cluster institution.

The third program is a collaborative effort to develop science and mathematics courses for students not majoring in science and mathematics. It will include a two-day workshop for faculty members and a later meeting to plan an experiment in curricular development.

The fourth program includes support for collaborative faculty research during the summer and for a series of two-day workshops for faculty members, graduate students and advanced undergraduates. Each workshop will focus on an important, new area of a scientific or mathematical discipline.

Carl S. Helrich, Jr., professor of physics, represents GC in the cluster.

The Pew Science Program is funded by The Pew Charitable Trusts, seven individual charitable funds established between 1948 and 1979 by the children of Joseph N. Pew, founder of the Sun Oil Company.

GC cited as "High-Quality, Lost-Cost" College

Goshen College is listed in the March issue of Changing Times, The Kiplinger Magazine, in an article titled, "Best of the Bargain Colleges."

GC is one of 42 U.S. colleges and universities listed as "High-Quality, Low-Cost Colleges" by the magazine. Private colleges on the list cost less than $10,500, which was the national average cost for private four-year colleges for the 1987-88 school year. Goshen College's total cost for tuition, room and board for 1987-88 is $8,250.

The object of the magazine's survey was to show that "it's possible to get a high-quality education for a dramatically lower price," the article says. In addition to cost figures, SAT scores of entering students also were considered. A panel of 13 education experts examined a list of 100 "finalists." If three or more panelists "endorsed" an institution, it made the final list.

GC in choral festival

A choir from Goshen College will participate in the first British-American Choral Festival July 1-9 in Cambridge, England. Dr. Doyle Preheim, who chairs the GC music department, will supervise the choir. Students from both the Chamber Choir and the GC Chorale will be in the group.

Two other choirs from the United States and two from Great Britain also will participate in the festival. After a week's rehearsal in Cambridge, they will perform Anton Bruckner's Mass in E Minor at a concert Saturday, July 9, in the cathedral at Ely, England. John Alldis, a world-renowned British choral director, will conduct the choirs in their rehearsals and the performance.

Goshen College was invited because Preheim took a choral workshop at Kansas State University, Manhattan, with Alldis a few years ago. Ten U.S. choirs were invited to participate and three were selected, Preheim said.

Author L'Engle to speak at commencement

Madeleine L'Engle, prize-winning author, will give the address at Goshen College's 90th commencement ceremony at 3 p.m. Sunday, April 17.

Approximately 220 Goshen College students will graduate at the service in the Union Auditorium.

L'Engle is best known as the author of A Wrinkle in Time, a science-fiction novel for children published in 1962 that won the John Newbery Medal. She previously spoke at Goshen College in 1984 as part of the S.A. Yoder Memorial Lecture Series.

Admission to the commencement service will be by tickets obtained from the graduates. Both the commencement service and the baccalaureate service at 11 a.m. the same day will be broadcast by WGCS, FM 91.1.

These students were an important part of this year's successful Phonothon, raising $131,218 in pledges!

Goshen COLLEGE

Theatre major approved

The Mennonite Board of Education has approved a new major and minor in theatre at Goshen College. The Goshen College board of overseers had recommended the action.

The new major and minor will be offered within the communication department.

The board also set fees for 1988-89 and approved faculty sabbaticals. The fee for tuition, room and board in 1988-89 will be $8,795, an increase of $545 over 1987-88. A discount for an early deposit will no longer be offered, but senior housing discounts will continue.

Sabbaticals were granted for the 1988-89 school year to Anna Bowman, associate professor of social work; Abner Hershberger, professor of art; Anne Hershberger, associate professor of nursing; Marlin Jeschke, professor of philosophy and religion, and Norma Jean Weldy, professor of nursing.

Others granted sabbaticals were Ruth Krall, associate professor of religion and director of peace studies, for calendar-year 1989; Judith Davis, associate professor of French and associate director of college relations, for spring terms in 1989, 1990 and 1991, and John Yoder, director of information services, July-December 1988. A leave of absence was granted to Floyd Saner, associate professor of computer science.

A tenure-track faculty position was approved for Shirley H. Showalter, associate professor of English and history. Showalter, who has had various administrative and teaching assignments since coming to Goshen in 1976, will join the English department half time in 1988-89 and move to full time in 1989-90.

New campus minister

A Canadian has been named campus minister at Goshen College.

Martha Smith Good, former pastor of the Guelph (Ontario) Mennonite Church, will become campus minister in the fall of 1988, according to Norman Kauffmann, dean of student development.

Good is a 1971 graduate of Goshen College and received her M.Div. from Goshen Biblical Seminary in 1977. She is also a graduate of Ontario Mennonite Bible Institute, Kitchener.

Currently she is studying at Toronto School of Theology (St. Michael's College) in the Doctor of Ministry program. She also teaches at Waterloo (Ontario) Lutheran Seminary under the Inter-Mennonite Pastoral Leadership Training Board in Ontario and Associated Mennonite Biblical Seminaries satellite program from Elkhart, Ind.

Prior to her ordination in 1982, Good was the chaplain at LaJunta (Colo.) Medical Center and co-pastor of the Stirling Avenue Mennonite Church, Kitchener, Ontario. She has also served on the pastoral teams at Hively Avenue Mennonite Church, Elkhart, Ind., and Oak Grove Mennonite Church, Smithville, Ohio.

Dean Willard Martin resigns

Dean Willard Martin has submitted his resignation as dean of Goshen College, effective August 1, 1988. President Victor Stoltzfus has accepted his resignation, expressing appreciation for Martin's four years of devoted service to the college. Martin will teach two courses in German in 1988-89 and lead the Study-Service unit in East and West Germany in the spring, 1989.

Martin has led the faculty of the college during a time of both the consolidation of existing programs and the addition of several new programs and has worked diligently at the important task of hiring qualified faculty. He said he looks forward to having more direct contact with students in classes and on SST.

His prior teaching experience was at Shippensburg (Pa.) State College and Pennsylvania State University. Before he became GC dean, he was executive head of the McKeesport campus of Penn State.

The search committee for a new dean will include Rafael Falcón, associate professor of Spanish; James Hertzler, professor of history; Ruth Krall, associate professor of religion, nursing and psychology; Fred Litwiller, director of career services; William Miller, director of the instructional materials center; Kathy Short, associate professor of education, and Alice Roth, executive vice president. Miller will chair the committee, with Roth serving as executive secretary.

Hershberger to receive Lilly Grant

Abner Hershberger, Goshen College professor of art, has been awarded a $23,600 Faculty Open Fellowship by the Lilly Endowment, Inc., Indianapolis, Ind., for the 1988-89 school year.

The Lilly Endowment awarded 10 fellowships to faculty members from colleges or universities in Indiana. The Faculty Fellows program is "an effort to provide support for teachers whose aspirations and needs might not be served by more conventional fellowships," according to the endowment.

A member of the Goshen College faculty since 1965, Hershberger received the B.A. degree from Goshen College in 1960, the M.A.T. degree from Indiana University in 1965, and the M.F.A. degree from the University of Michigan in 1970. He also has studied at the graduate level at the University of Notre Dame.

For his sabbatical during the 1988-89 school year, Hershberger will be the first artist-in-residence at the Badé Institute of the Pacific School of Religion, Berkeley, Calif. As artist-in-residence, he will mount an exhibition of his works, give lectures and audit courses in theology.

Will colleges be affordable tomorrow?

By Victor Stoltzfus

"Will Goshen College be affordable when my grade-school children are college age?" This question came to me recently from a young father in Seattle. Many people are discussing the issue of college expenses. They have been examined in recent months in Forbes, Newsweek, the Wall Street Journal and other media. College presidents and governing boards are painfully aware that college bills press hard against the resources of most families.

The economic environment for college finances has changed rapidly. During the 1970s students enjoyed more generous federal aid, but colleges had to cope with high inflation, dramatized by sharply higher energy costs. Faculty salaries on average lost 20 percent of their purchasing power in the '70s. Between 1980 and 1987 American society had lower inflation, but federal student aid decreased 15.9 percent when corrected for inflation (Source: The College Board).

Colleges in the 1980s would like to help their faculty regain lost purchasing power. We are also using more contributed dollars to replace the eroding federal support to students. Additionally, colleges face the responsibility for building upkeep, equipment, renovation and some needed new facilities.

What lies ahead for the 1990s? Given the burdensome debt and superpower military spending of the federal government, no one is predicting a significant increase in student aid from Uncle Sam. George Bush and Robert Dole, Republican candidates for the presidency, favor a tax-free savings plan for higher education. Several Democratic candidates advocate more generous loans to students with repayment adjusted to varied income levels. Whatever specific programs are adopted, the general pattern is clear. Many students and families of moderate means will require a combination of prior savings, payment out of current income during the college years, and borrowing and repayment after graduation.

At Goshen College our pricing decisions are balanced on the knife edge of an affordable price for students and sufficient income for program quality. Our tuition this year is $1,154 less than the average of the other private colleges with whom we are ranked in U.S. News & World Report. We have followed the national trend of substituting more of our contributed dollars for diminished federal student aid.

Assisted by the Mennonite Board of Education and in partnership with other Mennonite Colleges, we have encouraged church conference and congregational aid plans. Generous donors over the years have provided more than 75 designated student scholarships. Gifts through annuities, wills and bequests are also frequently designated for student aid. These and other sources made it possible for Goshen College to award $5,124 in average aid per student this year.

I can think of no other area of life where a purchase involves so many people helping to pay the bill. In a typical case, the actual cost of education is borne by student savings, parents, alumni donors, a state or federal loan or grant, a church grant and a donor who set up a scholarship. As our financial-aid guide puts it, "Financial aid is church members, taxpayers and individuals who believe in your education enough to make it possible."

Education is also unique in that such a variety of people benefit. Economists estimate a 10 percent annual return on investment in college in terms of added income. There are also the intangible benefits of forming lifelong friendships, growing into a more mature faith with the help of Christian professors and learning to examine and enjoy the ways in which philosophy, science, art, music and history enrich the world. Churches and local communities benefit from resourceful people who provide professional services and work as skilled volunteers. The nation benefits from having an informed, discerning citizenry capable of innovation and participation in a global economy.

Will college be affordable for the youth of tomorrow? The church, the nation and our interrelated world all have a stake in the answer. As long as the professed values of Christian education are actually achieved and the costs are carefully planned for and shared, we will keep the college doors open for the next generation.

Nursing in transition

On the cover

What image comes to mind when you hear the word nurse? Is it a nurse in the hospital taking someone's blood pressure? Or is it a nurse in the doctor's office assisting the physician during an examination?

Whatever your image is, it probably needs refreshing in light of what nurses are today.

Take Sharon Risser '74, the nurse on the cover of this Bulletin, for example.

In her career, Risser has been a staff nurse, head nurse in a hospital emergency room, the head nurse of a progressive care unit, started a department of education for a hospital and developed a home-health care program.

Now Risser is director of program development for Kolb & Christophel, Ltd., Goshen. Her job is to advise groups and organizations who provide care and services for the elderly in nursing homes, retirement centers, church or apartment complexes.

Is being a consultant, nursing? Though she works in a non-traditional nursing role, Risser is emphatic about still being a nurse.

"People ask me why I left nursing," she says, "and I tell them, 'I didn't. I am a nurse.' "

Risser says that what she's doing is taking the patient-oriented approach she learned in nursing and applying it in a new context.

"Although I don't start I.V.s any more, the patient is still the center of what I'm doing. I'm helping caregivers be more responsive to their residents."

Sometimes that means modifying traditional health-care models — models designed to serve the interests of doctors and nurses, not patients. "I'm helping them move from a medical model of care to a more social one," she says.

Nursing is changing, Risser suggests, but its goals remain the same.

This issue of the Bulletin explores the opportunities that these changes in nursing have created. —JDY

Nursing offers variety and challenge

By Anne Krabill Hershberger

When a group of college alumni meet and begin to update each other on what has happened in the years since graduation, one can hear comments like, "I am in private practice," "I'm doing research," "I am developing computer assisted instruction programs," "I'm teaching," "I'm counseling," "I am involved with extended care," "I'm doing community health assessments," "I've just completed my Ph.D.," or "I've become an entrepreneur."

None of these comments is too surprising coming from a group of college graduates. What may be surprising is that each of the persons could be a professional nurse. The roles of professional nurses today are more different than alike. Perhaps the only common element is that nurses make a difference in the health of those whose lives they touch.

The nursing profession's goal has always been to provide high quality nursing care for all who need it. Because of technological developments in health care, major changes have occurred in the way health care is delivered, what it costs, and how it is paid for and in the roles of health-care professionals, including nursing.

The variety of patient-care possibilities and settings requires a broad array of nursing competencies and considerable depth of knowledge. At no other time have the skills of critical thinking and decision making been so vital to the practice of nursing in so many different settings.

Nurses today care for sicker patients in and out of hospitals. Because of the high cost of hospitalization, patients are discharged while still needing skilled nursing care; therefore, nursing in home care and long-term care facilities presents much more complicated problems than existed five to seven years ago.

The high costs of today's care — 10.9 percent of the U.S. gross national product was spent on health care in 1986 — also means that nurses are increasingly involved in preventing health problems through health education, community health promotion and being health-care consumer advocates.

Other factors contributing to the increased demand for professional nurses are the growing proportion of elderly people in the population who require a greater proportion of health services; the elaborate diagnostic tools available for screening health problems; the increasing numbers of surviving babies having very low birth weight and associated problems, and the expanded roles for nurses. A recent American Hospital Association study revealed a 13.6 percent registered-nurse vacancy rate in acute-care institutions across the U.S.

While the opportunities and demands for nurses are increasing, the supply is decreasing. According to National-League-for-Nursing figures, enrollments in nursing-education programs have dropped 20 percent since 1983. That drop is partly because there are fewer 18-year-olds to enter college now.

But the problem is more than a result of changing demographics. The UCLA Higher Education Research Institute 20-year survey of college freshmen revealed that in 1968 the number of women interested in nursing was more than three times the number planning to study medicine. By contrast in 1986 the freshmen women intending to be physicians surpassed the number intending to be nurses by a ratio of 10 to eight.

The survey also indicated a 50-percent decline since 1974 in those planning to pursue nursing careers and an almost three-fold increase in the proportion interested in courses in business. In addition, it found that money, power and status were values the younger generation cherished, in contrast to the altruism and social concerns that are integral to the profession of nursing.

The U.S. has faced nursing shortages before. These earlier shortages were dealt with by using strategies like creating incentives to increase nursing-school enrollments, securing less well-prepared practitioners, raising entry-level salaries and recruiting nurses from foreign countries.

The underlying issues in the current nursing shortage are different; the shortage cannot be alleviated by using the strategies mentioned above.

Hiring less-well-prepared practitioners is unrealistic today because the nursing care needed in and out of the hospital requires a high level of education. More education, not less, is what we need to assure quality patient care.

Raising entry-level salaries for nurses sounds like a possible solution to the shortage problem, but even that is not the real issue today. Starting salaries for nurses are now comparable to those of other college graduates.

Nor is recruiting nurses from foreign countries a viable solution. They generally are needed in their own countries, and since they are more carefully screened regarding their level of education before leaving home, fewer are available to practice here.

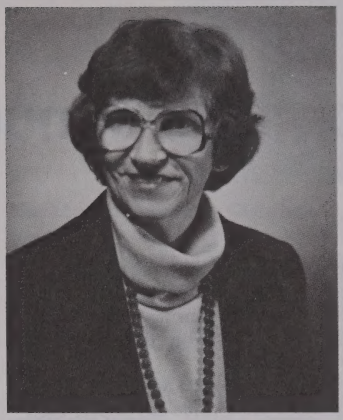
If earlier strategies will not work today, what will?

If nursing-school enrollments are to rise, we will need to recruit nursing students from non-traditional groups: persons seeking a second degree, greater numbers of males and minority persons, older, employed people who can attend classes only in the evenings or on weekends.

The kinds of salary changes needed to attract or keep more people in nursing are not increases at the starting level, but in later increments. Currently the average maximum salary for nurses is only $7,000 higher than the average starting salary. Too many employers do not offer substantial differences in salary for advanced education in nursing.

Salaries are a factor because women have more career options open to them today than ever before. Many of the other options offer comparable or higher economic rewards and do not require night and weekend work, as does hospital nursing where 68 percent of nurses are employed.

The critical issues that must be addressed if the supply of well-qualified nurses is to increase are: (1) a change in the public's perception of nursing and (2) improving the job satisfaction of nurses.



The public's perception of nursing is formed by personal contacts with nurses as well as media presentations. As these contacts and presentations increasingly bring people in touch with nurses who are well educated in nursing theories, wholistic health, theraputic communication, patient advocacy, collaboration skills, research and nursing processes, the concept of a "trained" nurse will disapear. Nurses must be "educated," thinking people to meet today's challenges.

According to Evelynn Gioiella, Dean of Nursing at Hunter College in New York, we can improve the job satisfaction of nurses by giving attention to the fact that young college-bound women want careers, not jobs; status, not subservience; competitive salaries, not low wages, and atonomy, not dependency.

What nurses need to achieve for greater job satisfaction is greater recognition for their essential and unique roles, possibilities for advancement within the clinical setting, greater autonomy, more interprofessional collaboration and more appropriate remuneration for the highly-qualifed, experienced nurse.

What does this overview of the nursing profession have to do with Goshen College? Much. We are proud of the special kind of nursing our more than 1,300 baccalaureate nursing graduates are doing throughout the world, nursing based on a sound theoretical base, perfected skills and Christian principles.

We continue to be pleased that the students majoring in nursing at GC have goals that grow out of motivations of service and caring, not money, power and status. They form an excellent fit with the mission of Goshen College.

We at Goshen College are meeting today's challenges in nursing by doing more of what we have always done: promote Christian values in our program and nursing care, increase understanding of contemporary nursing issues, develop student's unique nursing gifts and foster a life-long love for learning.

In addition, much more effort is devoted to recruitment of students. We want to continue preparing nurses to make a positive, Christian imprint on the world.

Anne Krabill Hershberger is associate professor of nursing at Goshen College.

Three options in nursing education

By Lois Landis Kurowski

Not long ago, a ruler buried a treasure in the high mountains that towered over the royal palace. The court chamberlain announced that any promising person could seek the treasure, with just one condition: the seeker would have to buy a map from the ruler.

Early the next morning, three seekers appeared before their ruler. The ruler showed them three envelopes, each with a different price, each containing a map. The cheapest was very thin. The medium-priced envelope was plumper. The most expensive was very plump.

"I must tell you that this is not a contest," the ruler said. "Each person who buys a map will find the treasure and will keep it. No person will come home empty-handed. Some of the routes to the treasure are more difficult than others, but each route has its own rewards."

The ruler offered no more explanation. The seekers were confused. Each one thought, "Which map should I buy?"

The choice facing the three seekers is similar to the choice facing students who want to study nursing in the United States. At the undergraduate level, three different educational paths can result in a person's becoming a registered nurse; some paths are more difficult than others, but each has its own purposes and rewards.

A nursing student can qualify to take a state licensing examination by graduating from either a two-year program with an associate's degree, a three-year hospital school with a diploma, or a four-year program at a college or university with a bachelor's degree in nursing (B.S.N.).

The main difference between associate-degree and diploma programs and B.S.N. programs is one of focus, according to Fran Wenger, director of the Goshen College nursing division. The oldest type is the hospital nursing school in which graduates earn a diploma after two-and-a-half or three years' study. However, as health-care costs rise, many hospitals have found that they no longer can subsidize nursing schools.

In many places, diploma schools have been replaced by two-year associate-degree programs in community colleges and conventional colleges. Like diploma programs, the two-year programs basically teach technical skills. "These programs are really needed now, but they are designed only to develop technical expertise in a certain setting, the hospital," she said.

The four-year program resulting in a B.S.N. degree may appear to be an expensive alternative. However, the bottom line is a bad guideline for choosing a nursing program, Wenger said.

"A baccalaureate program prepares students for first-level positions wherever nursing is practiced, not just in hospitals," she said. "The baccalaureate program in nursing has both more breadth and depth."

Now about two-thirds of all nurses in the U.S. practice in hospitals, while one-third practice outside hospitals. However, by the year 2000, those proportions will be reversed, making a B.S.N. even more valuable. "More nurses will be practicing in settings where they do not have immediate support systems," Wenger noted. Even now the B.S.N. degree is absolutely essential for those who want to enter nursing specialties or attain managerial positions.

GC's nursing graduates are particularly well prepared because Goshen integrates the liberal arts more completely than some other baccalaureate programs, Wenger said. Many colleges require nursing students to take all their non-nursing courses in the first two years. The last two years are completely filled with nursing courses.

In contrast, GC's students take non-nursing courses all the way through their undergraduate study, giving them additional time to synthesize knowledge from all their courses.

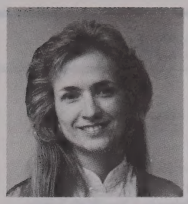
"We work hard to keep the nursing students integrated into the college, to enable them to participate in music, the arts and sports," she said. "It would be so much easier to teach only nursing in the senior year. However, we have a strong belief about the role of liberal arts in nursing education."

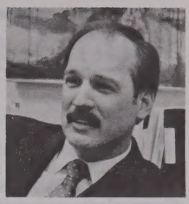
Another advantage Wenger sees in the liberal-arts emphasis is in personal development. Because nurses have to care for others so intensely, they sometimes neglect their own physical and emotional needs. Nursing students need to learn to care for themselves and to develop their own inner resources, Wenger said. The required Bible and religion classes and the Study-Service Term experience stimulate students to develop their emotional and spiritual resources.

The First Seeker bought the cheapest map and returned in two years with the treasure, saying, "I found it just beyond the foothills of the mountains." "What did you learn in your search?" the ruler asked. "I learned to walk briskly," the First Seeker said. "No one in the valley has stronger legs than I do now."

The Second Seeker bought the medium-priced map and returned in three years with the treasure, saying, "I found it half-way up the mountain." "What did you learn in your search?" the ruler asked. "I learned to walk briskly and work hard, because the map instructed me to go to a farm every morning and work for my breakfast," the Second Seeker replied.

The Third Seeker bought the most expensive map. Four years later, a letter arrived, addressed to the ruler. "Dear ruler," the Third Seeker wrote, "I want you to know I have just found the treasure on the other side of the mountain, but I will not return to the valley. I have discovered another mountain range. I will go conquer that mountain range, because now I not only have the treasure, I also know how to climb mountains."





I discovered who I was

By Eileen Good-Smucker '73

"To God be the glory, great things He hath done . . ." I hummed that old hymn as I drove home from the hospital. It was Sunday morning, I'd been up all night, and I'd missed church and choir practice. But the warm contentment I felt after the delivery overshadowed my fatigue.

Driving home, I reflected on the night and my work. Fifteen years ago I was a GC-nursing grad with a beginning job at Goshen Hospital, the night shift on 2-North, a medical unit. Now I'm a certified nurse-midwife in a private practice I own with another nurse-midwife and an obstetrician-gynecologist.

In between were years in Washington, D.C., Syracuse, N.Y., and here in Chicago, working at large university hospitals. I learned early on that I was more comfortable caring for other women and that I never tired of helping them give birth to their babies.

After working as a staff nurse for several years in a large hospital's labor and delivery unit, I found that I wanted more. I wanted to combine a longer patient relationship with the joy that comes with labor-and-delivery care.

I also wished to help women have more choices about how, where and with whom they would birth their babies. I also wanted more responsibility and autonomy in my work. Nurse-midwifery was a natural resolution.

After I finished my nurse-midwifery coursework at the University of Illinois in Chicago and the research project to complete my master's degree, I found a job as a nurse-midwife at a health maintenance organization (HMO). Back-up physicians were always available for advice and consultation, but I was now responsible for more independent assessments and decisions.

My confidence grew along with my new skills. I realized that I had found the profession that was "me."

As a certified nurse-midwife I manage the care of essentially normal, healthy women, including gynecologic care, counseling and family planning services. And, I care for pregnant women, providing prenatal care, managing their labor, delivering their babies, providing postpartum followup and support.

Recently I took on the challenge of starting a private practice with another CNM and an MD as partners. Suddenly, in addition to clinical practice, I am learning about being a businesswoman.

But most of all, I'm a midwife. When a delivery does not go well, there are still rewards in the important work of supporting the parents as they cope with the unexpected.

And then there is spending Saturday night and Sunday morning with a couple during labor, encouraging the woman as she finally pushes their baby into my hands, handing the baby into her waiting arms and sharing their tears and joy.

My teachers have been my models

By Clair E. Martin '66

When I entered the nursing program at Goshen in 1962 my aspirations included being a public-health nurse in the Alaskan Bush. I envisioned myself traveling to remote villages by dogteam, providing health care to the villagers. I never anticipated being the dean of a school of nursing.

At Goshen I was frustrated by being a male in nursing, but Anna Mae Charles inspired me to persist. Her competence and support personified the essence of nursing. From her I learned that students learn to care for others by being cared for.

Following a stint as a staff nurse at Elkhart General Hospital after graduation, I pursued a master's degree in psychiatric nursing at the University of Florida. From dean Dorothy Smith I learned that nursing is not the miniature practice of medicine and that a shared value system incorporating nursing education and practice is essential.

During that time I also learned to value Virginia Henderson's understanding of nursing. She says nurses assist people, sick or well, to do those things related to their health that they would do unaided, if they had the necessary knowledge, will, or ability to do so, or failing in this, to assist the person to a peaceful death.

Upon graduation, I joined the faculty at Florida. I soon realized that my career goals required a Ph.D., and I chose to specialize in family and medical sociology because of my concern that nursing expand its emphasis on families and groups.

While working toward my doctorate, I planned and implemented a new baccaluareate program at Western Carolina University.

When the program received full national accreditation, I resigned to complete my doctoral studies and then joined the faculty at University of North Carolina, Greensboro, to plan a new master's program.

Then, unexpectedly, the nursing deanship in Alaska came open, and I decided to pursue my earlier goal of serving the health-care needs of Alaskans. In that position I was able to influence the education of students and to participate with state and regional planning groups that improved health care and made it more accessible. Two years ago I became dean of the School of Nursing at Emory University.

I believe the respect and caring for individuals and the challenge to look at things from different perspectives that I learned at Goshen have been significant determinants of the personal and professional success I have experienced.

Need for patient-oriented nursing continues

"I didn't think a whole lot about Goshen's motto — Culture for Service — while I was there, but since then I really appreciate it," says Brenda Boehr Srof '82.

Jody and Brenda Boehr Srof are both 1982 graduates from the GC School of Nursing. Both are grateful that the faculty stressed treating the whole person.

Following graduation, the Srofs went to the Oral Roberts University City of Faith Hospital. They received their master's in nursing in 1986. Brenda specialized in nursing for the family and nursing education and Jody in pediatric nursing.

At ORU, Brenda helped develop a course on Transcultural Nursing that focused on Third-World needs and what nursing can do for those needs.

In 1986 the Srofs went to Kenya, where they taught general nursing at a hospital and clinic.

Nursing is entering an era with many opportunities opening up — areas such as gerontology, high-tech nursing, home care and others. But, Jody notes, there is always the need for high quality, patient-oriented nursing care.

Since returning to the U.S., the Srofs are living in Indianapolis, Ind., and work at the Riley Children's Hospital as staff nurses. They have been joined by Anna Marie, now three months old.

Experienced nurse adjusts to GC

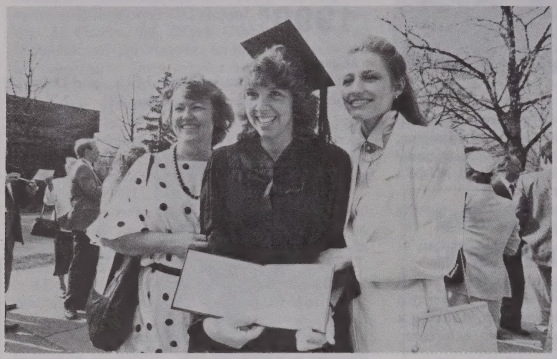
When Mary Driedger '87 was running an outpost nursing clinic in Belize for the Evangelical Mennonite Mission Conference, she kept getting nursing students from Goshen College who were on SST assignments.

Mary had been in Belize for 13 years and was thinking about returning to Canada and upgrading her skills. Through her acquaintance with the Goshen students, she learned to know Bud '70 and Phyllis Imhoff Wulliman '71, GC faculty in Belize. The Wullimans were very instrumental in helping Mary choose Goshen as the place to further her nursing education.

She came to Goshen College in 1985. She laughs as she recalls adjusting to the difference between her setting in Belize and the Goshen campus. However, she enjoyed her studies and felt accepted by the other students.

Mary is now in the master's of nursing program at the University of Manitoba where she has a maternal child nursing fellowship. She hopes to teach at a university combined with nursing practice at a hospital.

L'Engle calls for wholeness



Noted author Madeleine L'Engle told Goshen College graduates to strive for wholeness in their lives and to appreciate the role of imagination in the Christian faith.

"What you are, who you are will make the difference. Be who you are fully, wholly, and you will be a witness to all you have learned here and to all you have learned to care about," L'Engle said at commencement April 17. "Wholeness implies letting go — throwing ourselves into whatever we do."

A brisk breeze complicated the processional as faculty and graduates clutched their mortarboards. However, it was a nearly perfect day, with temperatures in the low 60s and many tulips and daffodils blooming on campus.

Thirty-six bachelor's of science in nursing and 212 bachelor's of arts degrees were awarded, along with five certificates in Hispanic Ministries, a certificate in business and nine special certificates for the Chinese scholars.

Being a Christian requires imagination because of the seeming irrationality of Jesus' birth, life, death and resurrection. "It takes every ounce of our God-given imagination to believe that all that power, all that glory willingly limited itself to come to us," L'Engle said.

The author of A Wrinkle in Time also urged graduates to accept the incomprehensible in Christianity. "If our faith was comprehensible, if we could surround God with our own understanding, it wouldn't be worth believing in. And it is," she said. "Anybody can believe the possible — that doesn't require any faith at all. We live by the impossible in science as well as religion."

That morning graduates heard Goshen College president Victor Stoltzfus preach the baccalaureate sermon, "The Journey to Knowledge," using Philippians 3:3-14 as his text.

"What's your security in the world of insecurity? College is a place where you begin to answer this question," Stoltzfus said. He urged the graduates not to base their security on individual talents, intelligence, material well-being or human relationships.

"It is still tempting to build our foundational security on one of God's gifts, rather than on the gifts of God. Paul's journey to faith calls us to put our faith, and only our faith, in the center of our life. Our true security is Jesus Christ," he added.

Well spoken

"War is much easier to start than it is to stop. It takes an incredible amount of work to get people to stop killing each other," John Paul Lederach said in a convocation speech April 6. He spoke to more than 150 people that evening. An associate director of Mennonite Conciliation Service, Lederach has been participating in negotiations between indigenous groups in Nicaragua (including the Miskito Indians) and the Sandinista government. Despite a kidnapping plot against his family and an assassination plot against him, Lederach plans to continue his work in Central America. "The bottom line for me consistently has been, is our pacifism something that has meaning, or is it simply an escape mechanism? Are we willing as a people who believe in peace and non-violence to project ourselves into the violent world, or is our non-violence merely a way to remove ourselves from the violence that is around us in this world?" he said.

Big weekend planned — Oct. 7-9, 1988

A celebration is being planned for Oct. 7, 8 and 9 in recognition of 20 years of the international-education requirement at Goshen College. The celebration will combine Alumni Weekend and Parents Weekend. All SST participants, including current students, are invited to participate.

Friday, Oct. 7, is an all-school study day. Guests from SST countries will conduct workshops.

Saturday, Oct. 8, special events for both alumni and parents will be held. A seminar relating to the SST experience will be conducted for parents.

A Golden-Anniversary reunion is planned for graduates of the class of 1938. The classes of 1943, 1948, 1953, 1958, 1963 and 1968 will also hold reunions.

People who participated in SST from 1969 to 1988 are invited to reunions with others from their SST location.

Class of 1973, 1978 and 1983 alumni who did not participate in SST are urged to attend the Saturday reunion of their choice. Sunday morning brunches are planned for these classes.

The founders of SST will be honored at the Saturday night banquet for parents and alumni. Other activities include departmental breakfasts and open houses on Saturday morning, a Caribbean steel band concert and an exhibit of Haitian art.

Plan now to attend. Details and registration form will appear in the July Bulletin.

Classwork increases understanding of prejudice, homelessness

Experience was a teacher for two GC winter trimester classes. J. Daniel Hess, professor of communication and English, set up an experiment in prejudice for his "Communicating Across Cultures" (CAC) class. After getting permission from Dean Willard Martin, he announced the experiment to the faculty and asked them to cooperate.

All 34 students in CAC had to wear headbands with "CAC" printed on them for five days. Those wearing CAC headbands could use only the restrooms in the Union, had to sit in designated areas during chapel and convocation, were restricted to one table in both the Leaf Raker and the Dining Hall and had to present special vouchers to be served at the library, bookstore, registrar's office and other campus offices.

The CACers ate a diet of rice and beans (supplemented with fruit, cheese and eggs for nutritional completeness) in the dining hall. All CACers had to spend 15 minutes performing menial labor in the Union; most scrapped wax off the floor.

Signs around campus proclaimed, "They could have avoided CAC," "Shun CAC, avoid flak," "Kool Kids shy away from CAC" and "CAC is for Other-Lovers."

Most class members found the CAC experiment to be an intense experience. In a post-CAC analysis session, senior Neil Amstutz, Hesston, Kan., said, "I was disturbed by many 'nice' people's vigorous participation and enjoyment of the oppressor role."

The experiment made junior Jana King, Clinton, Wis., reflect on her fall trimester SST experience in China. "In China, I was in a minority, but in a powerful minority," she said. "Now I actually identify with how powerless minorities feel. I learned a lot about some of my friends — I saw Christ in a lot of my friends."

Hess, who donned a CAC headband himself and suffered along with his students, believes the experiment was worthwhile. "For just about everybody, there was a moment of truth when the line between make-believe and reality disappeared," he said.

In Ruth Krall's "Liberation Theologies" class, she asked her students to make an action commitment to the poor as a class assignment, as well as to complete more traditional written ones.

"For Latin American theologians, 'praxis-based theology' is a circular process of biblical reflection and committed action to God's people, the poor ones. In this model of action and reflection, there is a dialogue between biblical study which asks, 'What does God's word in the Bible mean for me, here in my life, right now?' and committed action on behalf of poor and suffering sisters and brothers who are recognized because of their pain," Krall, associate professor of Bible, religion and philosophy, said.

Eleven students chose to experience 24 hours of homelessness on the streets of South Bend, Indianapolis or Chicago. They went to the city streets with limited funds; most either did not eat or ate in soup kitchens. All found shelters for sleeping.

Senior Connie Rice, Goshen, spent a night during the February mid-term break at Deb's Place, a shelter for homeless women in Chicago. She thought the experience was valuable. "There is a lot of theory in the Liberation Theologies course," she said. "My experience really brought it to life."

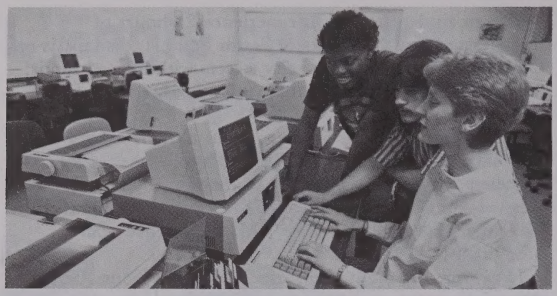
However, the night also raised many questions Rice is still thinking about. "It was horrifying in a way. It was very hard for me to feel a lot of sympathy for them," Rice said. "On the other hand, I try to imagine myself in their place. Sometimes I feel overwhelming despair to think that our society doesn't care for people. It's a terrible sin for a country to have so much and do so little for its people."

Byers portrait unveiled

An oil portrait of Noah Ebersole Byers, first president of Goshen College, was unveiled at a ceremony March 23 during convocation. The Walter E. and Mary C. Beyer Trust Fund, Indianapolis, donated the portrait to the college.

Attending the ceremony were Lynn R. Byers, South Bend, Ind., grandson of Noah E. Byers, and several of Byers' cousins from the Ebersole family. C. Floyd Byers, former GC professor of economics and Noah Byers' son, listened to the WGCS broadcast of the ceremony.

Artist Nikolaos G. Antonakis, center, a 1983 Goshen College graduate, shows his portrait of Noah E. Byers, Goshen's first president, to Lynn Byers, left, grandson of Noah Byers, and C. Floyd Byers, son of Noah Byers and former Goshen professor of economics.



New Kratz-Miller lab brings computing 'home'

Crusted bottles of correction fluid and boxes of erasable paper are becoming obsolete on the GC campus. Since late January, students have had another computer laboratory where they can crank out term papers and other assignments.

The new lab, yet unnamed, is in the basement of Kratz-Miller Residence Halls in what was known formerly as the "Cue Room." It houses 26 Zenith IBM-PC compatible microcomputers. Software available for student use include Microsoft Word and spreadsheet and database management programs.

Although the new lab is reserved for classes during the day, it's open to students from 7 p.m. until midnight with a student assistant on duty. The lab helps alleviate the congestion in the microcomputer laboratory in the Schertz Computer Center.

GC's policy on word processing has created the demand for access to PCs. Since 1985, the college has had a policy that all freshmen would receive word-processing instruction during the first trimester of their freshman year and that word-processing facilities would be available free to all students. Word processing is taught as part of the freshman colloquium course; about 75 percent of all GC students have learned it in colloquium.

The cost of the new laboratory, approximately $50,000, was funded with a grant from the Lilly Endowment, Inc., Indianapolis, Ind.

Kropf named to overseers

Diane Alderfer Kropf, Harleysville, Pa., has been appointed to the Goshen College Board of Overseers by the Mennonite Board of Education.

Kropf graduated from Goshen College in 1968 with a B.S. in nursing. She has done graduate work at Oregon State University, Corvallis, Ore., Brigham Young University, Provo, Utah, and the Associated Mennonite Biblical Seminaries, Elkhart, Ind. In 1982 Kropf was certified as an adult health nurse practitioner by the Pennsylvania State Board of Nursing.

Her nursing experience includes work in administration, mental health, women's health, health education, physical assessment, college health, medical-surgical and pediatric nursing.

Nyce named interim dean

John D. Nyce, GC registrar and assistant professor of mathematics, will serve as interim dean of Goshen College. Nyce will assume his additional responsibilities Aug. 1, replacing Willard Martin, who resigned to return to teaching.

Nyce has been a member of the GC faculty since 1966. He received a B.A. from Goshen College in 1959 and a M.A.T.M. from the University of Detroit in 1966. He also studied at the Harvard University Graduate School of Education in 1976-77.

New sports camp added

For the first time, the GC physical education department will offer a tennis camp July 4-8 for high-school age players. Diana Perry, a local U.S. Tennis Association teaching pro, will be the lead instructor. Assisting Perry will be Joy Hess and John Ingold, the GC tennis coaches. Both day and overnight options will be available. For more information, write to Ruth Gunden at the college or telephone (219) 535-7496.

Mosley receives ICH fellowship

For the third consecutive year, a member of the Goshen College faculty has received a summer fellowship for research from the Indiana Committee for the Humanities. David L. Mosley, assistant professor of music, will use the $4,000 fellowship to analyze with a computer recordings of Welsh poet Dylan Thomas reading his poetry and to attend the Welsh National Eistefodd, a music and poetry festival.

Mosley plays the French horn, but his background also includes the study of literature. He teaches in both the music and humanities programs at GC. "My real interest is in the connections between music and literature," he said. "I have loved Dylan Thomas' poetry for a long time. However, it is extremely dense and obscure. I was never sure I thoroughly understood it."

When he heard recordings of Thomas reading his poetry, Mosley discovered that some of Thomas' works, which seemed incomprehensible on the printed page, sounded musical when the poet read them aloud. He now believes Thomas may have written some poems more for the sound of the words than for the meaning.

Faculty appointed in TESOL and nursing

Goshen College Dean Willard Martin has announced the appointment of two persons to the faculty.

Carl E. Barnett, Jr., will be an assistant professor of English, teaching courses on the teaching of English as a second language (TESOL). Currently a resident of Arlington, Va., Barnett received a bachelor's degree in history with honors from Duke University in 1975, a post-graduate diploma in Christian studies from Regent College, Vancouver, B.C., in 1980, and a master's degree in English and linguistics with a certificate in TESOL in 1988 from George Mason University. He also has studied at the Summer Institute of Linguistics in 1978 and 1979.

Barnett currently teaches ESL in the Fairfax County (Va.) Department of Adult and Community Education. From September, 1985, to July, 1986, he taught at the Sichuan Foreign Language Institute in Chongqing, Sichuan, People's Republic of China, under the Educational Services Exchange program.

Linda E. Witmer will be an associate professor of nursing, teaching courses in public health nursing. Currently a resident of Gap, Pa., she received a bachelor's degree in nursing from Eastern Mennonite College, Harrisonburg, Va., in 1973 and a master's degree in public health nursing in 1982 from the University of North Carolina in Chapel Hill. She is now a public health nurse with the Chester County (Pa.) Health Department.

From August, 1982, until July, 1985, she worked as the administrator of a rural health program and team leader for community development programs for the Mennonite Central Committee in San Pedro Carcha, Guatemala.

Elizabeth Bender dies

Elizabeth Horsch Bender, 93, a former member of the Goshen College faculty and a well-known translator and editor, died March 24 at her home in Goshen. The daughter of John and Christine Funk Horsch, she married Harold S. Bender in 1923. He died in 1962.

Mrs. Bender attended both Hesston and Goshen colleges, graduating from GC in 1918. She also received a master's degree from the University of Minnesota. She taught at GC from 1924 to 1963, when she retired. Among the subjects she taught were German, Latin, English and mathematics.

In the 1950s Mrs. Bender translated the entire Mennonitisches Lexikon, which formed the core for the Mennonite Encyclopedia. She was a major editor for the Mennonite Quarterly Review for many years.

Memorials may be directed to the Mennonite Historical Library.

Books in print

Practicing, A Liturgy of Self-Learning (Pinchpenny Press) by Lon Sherer, GC professor of music. The book grew out of Sherer's experiences in re-learning how to play the violin. In 1975 he had surgery to remove a tumor from the right acoustic nerve. The surgery was successful but resulted in his losing all hearing in his right ear and partial control of nerves and muscles on his right side. Sherer could not write or play the violin. He began re-learning how to play the violin and found himself re-learning how to learn. Price: $2.50 plus $1 postage.

Mission in Asia (Pinchpenny Press) by Stanley Shenk, GC professor emeritus of Bible. The book contains excerpts from a journal Shenk kept while traveling in Asia for nine months from September, 1985, to June, 1986, teaching Bible classes in Japan, Hong Kong, Thailand, India, Burma and Indonesia. Price: $6.50 postpaid.

Retirees honored at banquet

Two retiring faculty members were honored May 6 at the annual Faculty-Staff Spring Banquet.

C. Norman Kraus, adjunct professor of religion, and Mary Oyer, professor of music, were honored.

A 1946 Goshen College graduate, Kraus received a B.D. from Goshen College Biblical Seminary in 1951, a Th.M. from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1954 and a Ph.D. from Duke University in 1961. He joined the GC faculty in 1951. In summer, 1987, he and his wife Ruth completed 7-1/2 years of missionary service in Japan. He also published a book, Jesus Christ Our Lord, in 1987.

Although Oyer retired in 1987, she was completing a two-year assignment then in Kenya for Mennonite Central Committee, collecting and preserving African music. Oyer graduated from GC in 1945. She received her master's and doctoral degrees from the University of Michigan and also studied at the University of Glasgow. She joined the GC faculty in 1945. She is now working on the new hymnal for Mennonite and Church of the Brethren churches.

Who needs a nurse?

By Victor Stoltzfus

Who needs a nurse?

Everyone. For most of us a nurse was present or nearby at the moment of our birth and will likely be present in the closing hours of life.

The nursing profession in this country is increasingly versatile. Look for nurses in general hospitals, mental hospitals, hospices, doctor's offices, county health departments, blood banks, nursing homes, 24-hour clinics, schools, industry, private care, research departments and colleges.

Nurses also have a distinguished history as caregivers in the overseas ministries of the church. Our survey of nursing alumni shows that 33 percent have spent time abroad, many in the developing nations of the world. They have been nurse educators on three continents. Nurses and other helping professionals have played an important role in confirming the loving words of the Christian Gospel with caring actions.

Healing care in the context of Christian compassion goes back to the first century. Deacons and deaconesses cared for members of the Christian community and also served the larger community. Special places to care for the sick are mentioned as early as the fourth century. During the Middle Ages the monasteries invented a new institution, the hospital. Both the Protestant Reformation and Catholic Counter-Reformation spawned expanding health care institutions in response to both local and missionary needs. Members of the free churches took the lead in health care service.

The shape of healing ministries in the modern world is strikingly similar to what has happened in education. Just as church colleges persist in a landscape dominated by large secular universities, hospitals named Presbyterian, Mennonite or Lutheran or with biblical names such as St. Luke's or St. Joseph's still provide modern healing services, continuing a long tradition of faith and health care. Dr. Bernie Siegel's provocative book on the power of faith in healing, Love, Medicine and Miracles, is on the current best-seller list.

Persons whose insurance provides access to modern medicines live in an age of medical wonders. Discoveries in pharmaceuticals, surgical applications of lasers, organ transplants and magnetic resonance scanners are impressive contributions of modern science. And it is an equal wonder of the human spirit that nurses and other sensitive caregivers, where working conditions permit, keep the human touch amidst the technology. In every century since Jesus of Nazareth, dedicated healers have offered health care and love in the name of Christ.

In recent years, however, nursing enrollments have declined — 20 percent nationally since 1983 and even more in the Mennonite colleges. Time reports that the nation's hospitals are "locked in the grip of what could become the worst nursing shortage since World War II" (March 14, 1988). The New York Times estimates the current shortage at 300,000 nurses and rising (April 10, 1988).

Nurses are such a vital part of modern health care that the current shortage of nurses is forcing those who employ nurses to provide better salaries. It is far less expensive for a hospital to pay nurses more and keep a wing open than to lose patients.

Several hospitals send representatives to Goshen College to recruit graduates. Others place advertisements in the school paper. Some employers pay students a bonus just to appear for an interview.

The issue of better working conditions is more complex and will take longer to solve. But where progressive health care institutions address these concerns with meaningful changes, they attract and retain nurses.

We will all benefit if nursing continues to attract able men and women with a Christian-service motivation. The health-care ministries of the Mennonite Church through missions, the Mennonite Central Committee and Mennonite general and psychiatric hospitals require hundreds of nurses.

It is encouraging that health care institutions are providing scholarships or loans to nursing students. In order to secure needed nurses in the future, more such institutions will need to provide educational loans that can be forgiven in whole or in part for a specified commitment of employment.

As the current student generation explores a much wider set of occupational options for both men and women, we should acknowledge our continuing need in church and society for the human service professions. Since World War II, nursing, the Christian ministry, teaching and social work have been chosen by thousands of Goshen College students. Mennonite nurses have scattered themselves throughout the general health-care systems of the U.S. and Canada. Goshen College has graduated more than 1,300 nurses since 1953.

While the needs of society and student choice are constantly changing, all of us who place a high value on our own health and well being should respect and value those who care for us during illness and recuperation.

Interest in nursing is increasing, but there is room for more students in Goshen's program. Encourage someone — younger or older — to consider nursing at Goshen College!

College Bulletin

About this issue

SST represents the success of a creative and original vision. When it began in 1968, there were no other international education programs that combined international service and study, experiental learning and small group experience at the undergraduate level. No models existed to guide the planners in how it should be done; they had no blueprints for incorporating a 14-week term off campus into the rest of the curriculum.

Thankfully, uncertainty did not stifle the vision, and 20 years ago the faculty of Goshen College took a chance on a radical idea that has changed the concept of what liberal arts education should be, not only at Goshen College, but at colleges and universities across the country.

Today, when people think of Goshen College's unique qualities, SST is one of the first things they mention. The radical vision has become a central part of our identity as a college.

In this issue Paul Mininger and Henry Weaver, two of the principle architects of SST, help put its development into an historical context. Their teamwork and the support of the faculty made SST a reality, despite many practical problems.

Comments from the 1986 alumni survey suggest the impact of SST on participants, and photographs evoke the day-to-day life of units through the years. Our thanks to the alumni who shared their comments and photographs.

This issue of the Bulletin begins a year-long emphasis on SST at Goshen College in recognition of its 20th anniversary. A major part of that celebration will be Festival Internationale, Oct. 7-9, 1988, an event that combines Parents Weekend, Alumni Weekend and reunions of SST participants from various geographical locations.

Join us for a festive weekend. — JDY

The Goshen faculty create SST

By Henry D. Weaver

The faculty were in animated discussion as they entered Science Hall 101. Groups of three or four came through the door with hands gesturing, obviously in debate. J. Daniel Hess was already seated with paper on the writing pad before him, ready to take the minutes of the session. So far he had recorded the date: May 18, 1967. Someone in the fifth row was holding the proposal for discussion and making a point to the person behind him. Others sat quietly rereading the document.

President Paul Mininger and Dean Carl Kreider came in separately. Everyone knew the agenda. The faculty had been discussing various major changes since the faculty retreat at Little Eden at the beginning of September. Not in the memory of most faculty present had any topic received so much debate and attention from so many people.

The proposal before the faculty involved more change than the college had seen in years. Specifically it was draft number four of a Program Model for Goshen College. The section under debate had five parts:

1. A trimester calendar
2. A Study-Service Trimester
3. A new concept in courses
4. New general education and graduation requirements
5. A schedule and plan for implementation

The proposal came from the Committee on the Future of the College. President Mininger had set up this committee at the beginning of the 1965-66 year. It included some of Goshen's most creative minds. Anna Mae Charles, Ralph Gunden, Norman Kraus, Russel Liechty, John Oyer, J.B. Shenk, Rudy Wiebe, John Howard Yoder, Dean Kreider and President Mininger were on the original committee. I served as the executive secretary for the group. J. Daniel Hess, Howard Kauffman and Karl Massanari replaced Kraus, Oyer and Wiebe when they left for sabbaticals during the second year. For most of the first two years the committee met weekly for two hours. No one represented their respective departments. Each member focused on the college as a whole rather than any special interest they might have had.

The first meeting was on Nov. 1, 1965. By the second meeting we were examining ways to internationalize the curriculum. One impetus came from the latest report of an accrediting team from the North Central Association of Schools and Colleges. While praising the college and renewing its accreditation, the report pointed out that we had an unusual resource in the 50 percent of the faculty who had lived abroad; however, the report noted that we were not making use of this expertise in any special way. At this second meeting the committee listed five ways to internationalize the institution. One suggestion was to send students abroad.

In succeeding meetings the committee debated whether to require a period abroad or to make a strong incentive for it. By mid-January we were convinced that some type of international service experience should become the norm for students at Goshen College. How long should such a term be? What should be the academic components of such a period abroad? During which year of college should a student take such a term? What language competence would be needed? How would transfer students fit into such a proposal? What would it cost?

Getting a handle on these issues involved a lot of research. With Ralph Gunden's help we did cost anaylsis on a variety of schemes. John Nyce supplied the data to examine the flow of transfer students and the language competence of the student body. At every turn there was cooperation and help to analyze the various possibilities.

I spent the following summer working on a model for Goshen College that outlined, among other things, a term of service abroad. Several weeks of the work was done at a workshop at the University of Iowa under the direction of Professor Allen Pfnister. Together we tried to construct a model that would have at least one answer for every problem that the change would bring.

In August the committee presented the faculty with a proposed model for Goshen College that was to be the basis for discussion at the Faculty Retreat. In presenting the proposal it was stated that, "It is not assumed that this model will ever be presented for adoption as such, but rather that it may become the basis for a process from which a program to be adopted will result."

On Oct. 6, 1966, the faculty agreed in principle to include a term of service abroad and the Committee on the Future of the College began to tackle the various problems that would result depending on whether the term was a semester, trimester or quarter in length. Consensus moved toward the trimester option that would give a 13-week period abroad and would utilize year-round operation. This option presented special problems to the departments of nursing, teacher education and music and to extracurricular activities. The departments involved met with the committee to discuss the problems. The positive spirit of the faculty who saw problems in their own programs is illustrated by the response of two departments:

> "The music department will be giving further consideration to ways to meet these problems and to new opportunities which the proposal might offer the department."

> "The division of nursing will work at the problem of planning a good program, under suitable conditions, within the trimester."

Faculty and students entered into discussion about the pros and cons of the proposals. Feelings ran high many times. It was a time when teaching jobs were easy to find, and it would not have been surprising if half the faculty had left for less threatening pastures. However, here were people searching for something new and significant.

President Mininger called the faculty meeting to order. The meeting was academia at its best. There was good critical discussion. Issues were debated. We all knew the stakes were high. The impact of the proposed changes would change our lives and the life of the college.

Finally votes were taken on the various parts of the model. The proposals for new concepts in courses, new general education and graduation requirements were passed, as was a proposal outlining alternate ways to meet the Study-Service requirement. The trimester calendar and the period of service now called the Study-Service Term (SST), had previously been accepted in principle.

The procedure agreed to by the faculty was to vote on the separate parts and then vote whether to adopt the total package or not. We had all spoken our pieces, now it was time to decide. The question was called. You could feel the tension in the air. Would such a radical program be passed? The vote was unanimous! (One member abstained, but became a SST leader within a year.)

I am frequently asked how the GC faculty ever came to agree on the radical changes that came about by instituting SST. My answer is: Goshen has a great faculty. Few faculties would have the cooperation and vision to make such changes. The faculty spirit demonstrated in the process of adopting SST illustrates what makes Goshen a great school.

Summers trained in shock-wave procedure

Robert W. Summers '62, professor of internal medicine at the University of Iowa Hospitals, is a joint supervisor of the new gallstone lithotripter service located in the Hospitals Center for Digestive Diseases. In January, he received advanced training in the procedure that pulverizes gallstones with shock waves.

In this procedure, a powerful electric spark-plug electrode in the gallstone lithotripter generates shock waves that are focused on the gallstone, guided by ultrasound. The shock wave lasts only a fraction of a second. The treatment lasts 45 to 90 minutes during which 1,200 to 1,600 shock waves break up the stone.

For many patients, the procedure is pain free and for most others little or no pain suppressants are required.

Historically, gallstones have been corrected by surgery. But, Summers says, the new technology has potential for significant benefits for patients with painful gallstones. The lithotripsy procedure allows the patient to get back to work much more quickly and with less cost than the surgical method does.

So far, problems have been minimal and Summers is looking forward to continued success of the advanced technology.

SST remains strong influence

Goshen College's Study-Service Term program has a way of shaping lives years after the three-month study term. One good illustration is what has happened to Larry Wyse '69.

Wyse, from Archbold, Ohio, was part of the first SST unit to live and work in Nicaragua in 1969. There he developed an appreciation for Central American people and a new awareness of the political situation.

Through talking to old men in the city, Larry learned of U.S. involvement in Central America that is not recorded in our history books. He still remembers the impact that learning made.

Through the years he has retained his interest in Central America and has found ways to integrate his learnings with his life and faith. Every year he participates in a debate at the local high school regarding the politics of Central America.

The Wyse family, including Donna (Larry's wife) and children — Jason, Barnaby and Angela — has opened their home to many international people. The first came in 1976; other exchangees followed.

Currently, their home is shared by an El Salvadoran refugee, who came in October, 1986, and her 7-year-old son, who arrived in April, 1988. They are part of the Overground Railroad network and plan to be on their own soon.

The Wyses have spent time and energy going through the necessary paper work to grant the refugees legal status. But they see their involvement as a logical outcome of their Christian faith and witness.

Networking with new graduates

John Rupe '73 remembers what it's like to be a student hoping to get into a research laboratory and not knowing quite how to go about it. So he has begun doing what he can to help Goshen students get some valuable experience.

Rupe is assistant professor of plant pathology at the University of Arkansas, Fayetteville. He is involved with the epidemiology of sudden-death syndrome in soybeans.

The university department of plant sciences has a program to encourage undergraduates to work in the lab and do research as interns. Rupe has arranged for Goshen students to work in the program.

Beth Bartel and Stefan Martin, both 1988 graduates, have worked in Rupe's laboratory. Another student, Wendy Schilling, participated in the program but not directly with Rupe.

Martin is at the lab this summer. Besides becoming familiar with the routines of the plant pathology lab, he will be assigned a project of his own. In August, Martin will depart for Europe and participate in the MCC-trainee program.

Bartel's experience in the summer of 1987 was very positive and valuable. A biology major with a communication minor, she worked with Rupe on the soybean pathology project.

She says her internship helped confirm what she suspected — that she really did not want to pursue a profession in biology. She is grateful that she was able to put her doubts to the test before going on to graduate school.

Bartel will move to Washington, D.C., for a voluntary service term where she hopes to use her journalism training.

Notes

Martha Mikel Hong received a master's degree in social work from Maywood College, Scranton, Pa., in May 1987.

Michael Jantze, 22713 Sylvan St., Woodland Hills, CA 91367, has finished a cartoon book entitled, Normal U.S.A., and has begun the laborious process of finding a publisher and/or syndicate. A limited hand-bound edition of 1,000 are currently for sale. The book deals with relationships, armadillos and Amish folk.

Marriages

Mark Ropp and Elizabeth Keim, both from Phoenix, Ariz., April 16.

M. Thomas Rosenberger, Souderton, Pa., and Dorine Smucker, Somerset, Ohio, April 9.

Harley Yoder, Milford, Ind., and Starla Graber, Nappanee, Ind., June 18.

Notes

Joseph Masemola graduated from the Reformed Theological Seminary in Jackson, Miss., May 20.

Glenda Shirk, Englewood, Colo., works as an R.N. at the Children's Hospital at Denver.

Marriage

Graeme Salisbury, Devon, England, and Sandra Nickel, Fresno, Calif., Aug. 28.

Birth

Lee and Donna Parcell Leatherman, Goshen, Laura Joan, March 15.

Notes

Robert Freed and Christy Ely began a two-year Mennonite Central Committee assignment in Nain, Labrador, where they are working as clinical registered nurses.

Denise Gresham, Normal, Ill., a social worker at Saint James Hospital in Pontiac, is also enrolled in the University of Illinois graduate social work program.

As a layout artist in the advertising department of a local department store, Joanne Groff, Lancaster, Pa., develops newspaper ads.

Arlene Hinckle, an independent studio teacher in North Newton, Kan., and part-time faculty member at Hesston College, has been recognized as a nationally certified teacher of piano by Music Teachers National Association. She is currently pursuing a master's degree in performance at Wichita State University.

James Miller, San Antonio, Texas, works as a programmer analyst for the University of Texas Health Science Center. Debra Miller works as an R.N. for St. Rose Catholic Hospital.

Mona Schertz graduated from the West Suburban College of Nursing at Oak Park, Ill., in May.

Roderick Schlabach, Goshen, a May graduate from Tri-State University, has accepted a job as a mechanical engineer with Delco-Remy in Anderson, Ind.

Lowell Stutzman, Kutztown, Pa., works as an area sales manager for Reading (Pa.) Bone Fertilizer Co.

Libby Yoder, Gordonville, Pa., teaches grade one at New Danville Mennonite School.

Charles and Celia Roberts Pederson (staff '85-86), Goshen, Charles LeRoy, Jr., Jan. 4.

Jeffrey and Paula Showalter (staff '77-79), Goshen, Jonathan Jeffrey, Feb. 15.

Notes

S. David Garber (faculty '65-72) from Dalton, Ohio, has been named general book editor of Herald Press, a division of Mennonite Publishing House, Scottdale, Pa. He will help select and develop appropriate book manuscripts for Herald Press.

Lou Ann Overfelt Good (faculty '67-69), Goshen, has been named sales coordinator at Greencroft. She will handle all initial inquiries regarding Greencroft housing options, develop and manage a centralized waiting list and pre-sell apartments in Manor IV.

Ralph and La Vada Hull (staff '66-86), Goshen, celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary in April. He is employed part-time on the maintenance staff of the Elkhart County 4-H Fairground.

Onnie and Shirley Ridenour Puro (staff '72-79), Goshen, celebrated their 40th wedding anniversary April 4. He is an accountant and she is a homemaker.

"Ambassadors'" children

The offspring of Georges and Edith Hudicourt pose for a GC alumni photo. Bridgette '81 is a second-year student in opthalmology at the University of Haiti; Martine '85 is a second-year medical student at the same university; Caroline '86 is teaching English in a French school; and Jean-Claude '83 is coordinator of an educational materials organization. Myriam '88, a biology major, was not present for the photo.

Georges and Edith Hudicourt, physicians and professors of medicine, are Goshen College advocates in their hometown of Port-au-Prince, Haiti. They sent five of their own children to GC and at least 14 SSTers have lived in their home.

Georges and Edith have served as counselors, lecturers and physicians to GC students and faculty. Perhaps their most important role is that of goodwill ambassadors for GC. For their many years of service, we say "Thank you."

Festival Internationale —

October 7-9, 1988

TWENTY YEARS
INTERNATIONAL
GOSHEN COLLEGE

Join us for the 1988 Alumni Reunion Weekend, Parents Weekend and the celebration of 20 years of the international education requirement at Goshen College.

Events include an All-School Study Day, Friday, Oct. 7. Humberto Perez (Costa Rica), Colville Young (Belize) and Carlos Hernandez (Honduras) are among guests who will lead workshops on issues related to their own homelands. Founders of the SST program will participate as well. The day will conclude with a major public forum.

Saturday, Oct. 8, will include departmental breakfasts and open houses, a morning seminar for parents, reunion luncheons and the Alumni Banquet.

Five-year class reunion luncheons are planned for the classes of '38, '43, '48, '53, '58, '63 and '68.

SST reunion luncheons are planned for alumni from classes of 1968-69 to present. If you were a GC student during this time but did not go on SST, you are invited to participate in the country reunion of your choice.

There will be SST reunions for participants who went to Belize, China, Costa Rica, Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Germany, Guadeloupe, Haiti, Honduras, Jamaica, Korea, Nicaragua and Poland. Unit leaders and guests from many of these countries will also be present.

Saturday afternoon the Clemente School Steel Band, from Chicago will present a concert of Latino, Caribbean and popular music at Schrock Plaza.

A gala banquet, Saturday evening, will honor the founders of the SST program. The keynote address will be given by Rev. Theodore M. Hesburgh, C.S.C., President Emeritus of the University of Notre Dame. He is widely known and respected for his efforts to increase world peace.

Child care — for students K through grade eight — is available on Saturday.

Come and bring others!

Teams complete season

Baseball

In a season that was expected to be simply a rebuilding year, the Maple Leafs finished the season with a very respectable 17-22-1 record. Their 10-10 conference record was good enough for a third place finish behind Huntington and Marian.

After hovering around the .500 mark much of the season, the record dropped to 14-20-1 after a late six-game losing streak. But the Leafs bounced back to sweep a doubleheader from Marian, the No. 2-ranked NAIA team in the state. That sweep enabled Goshen to qualify for the NAIA District-21 playoffs for only the second time in history.

Goshen proceeded to notch an 8-1 upset over No. 1-seeded Hanover in the first game of the tourney. The Leafs then bowed to Huntington 16-7 and Manchester 18-14 to close out their season.

The main strength of the team was its hitting, as evidenced by a team batting average of .310. Six players hit at least .300, led by Phil Kym with a .375 average. Other .300 hitters were Al Kemper (.346), Darren Miller (.333), Jeff Kauffman (.319), Pedro Hernandez (.317), and Brad Roth (.300).

Kym led the team with seven home runs, followed by Kemper with six and Joe Lehman with three. Kym also led the team with 41 RBIs, while Miller drove in 25 and Mark Gerber had 24.

Kym and Doug Dischler each compiled 5-4 records on the mound, and Miller had a 4-4 record. Kym led the staff with a 4.41 ERA.

Golf

A senior-dominated golf team finished strongly in both the MCC Conference race and the District-21 Tournament. In the conference, the Leafs tied for second with Huntington with identical 13-7 records. Marion won the conference with an 18-2 record. Goshen then outplayed both conference rivals in the District-21 Tourney, finishing fourth behind Franklin, Tri-State and Hanover.

Lon Swartzentruber and Matt Steiner each made the MCC All-Conference team with averages of 84.6 and 86.0 respectively. Doug Steiner earned All-District honors with a two-round score of 159.

Coach John Ingold received the Coach-of-the-Year award for the MCC Conference.

Track

With only small squads representing both the men's and women's track teams, the Maple Leafs did not accumulate many team honors this season. However, there were several noteworthy individual accomplishments, as many school records fell.

Sophomore sprint specialist Donna Porter led the assault on records setting new school, HCW and District-21 records in the 100- and 200-meter dashes. Her personal bests of 12.1 and 25.5 qualified her for the national NAIA meet held in Azusa, Calif. At the national meet, Donna made it through the first-round heats in both dashes before being eliminated in the semifinals.

Becky Yoder also competed in the national meet, qualifying in the high jump with a school record jump of 5-6. In addition, she set the school triple-jump record with a 33-8. Yoder capped off her outstanding year by being named to the national NAIA Scholar-Athlete track team.

Other record-setters were Kathy Klopfenstein in the shot put with an effort of 34-1, Becky Troyer in the discus with a throw of 118-2, and Kim Roth in the 400-meter dash with a time of 1:03. The women's team also set records in the 800-meter sprint medley relay with a time of 1:59.50 and the 1600-meter relay with a time of 4:30.74.

John Vandenburg had a fine season for the men, and was named to the MCC All-Conference team for winning the 400-meter dash at the Conference meet.

Merit scholarships awarded to six seniors

Goshen College has awarded four-year Merit Scholarships to six high-school seniors who will be freshmen at the college in the fall.

Recipients of the Goshen College Burkholder Merit Scholarships are David Schipani, Elkhart, Ind.; Tami Schlabach, Middlebury, Ind.; Anne Nofziger, Paoli, Ind., and Anita Mast, Hesston, Kan.

David Cooper, Scottdale, Pa., is a recipient of a National Merit Scholarship sponsored by Richard King Mellon Foundation of Pittsburgh.

Richard Huber, Leola, Pa., received a National Merit Scholarship sponsored by R.R. Donnelley and Sons Company, a publisher of periodicals.

The recipients were among 14,000 finalists in the National Merit Scholarship program who competed for more than 6,000 scholarships awarded nationwide this spring. Each winner will receive between $1,000 and $8,000 over four years of undergraduate study. Scholarships are based on rigorous academic standards and information about extracurricular activities and contributions to the school and community.

The opening of the "Small Folk" exhibit in the Goshen College Gallery June 10 drew children of all ages to the exhibit of toys and other objects made for children by Mennonites, Amish and Hutterites. Katelyn Nafziger, 4-year-old daughter of Roger '78 and Laurie Neumann Nafziger '78 of Goshen, enjoyed playing with the hands-on display of marble rollers. The exhibit will continue through July 29.

Three members of the class of 1938 refurbish their class gift in readiness for their 50-year reunion, Oct. 7 and 8. Class President John A. Friesen (center) is joined by Emanuel Hertzler and S. Paul Miller in scraping old paint from the pergola. Classmates contributed money for new plants and a new concrete floor for the structure that has provided generations of students with shade and a place to sit.

Beck chronicles life of "Goshen Folk Hero"

Joe Wright, Goshen Folk Hero is the title and the subject of a book by Ervin Beck, GC professor of English. The book was published for the Goshen Historical Society by the Pinchpenny Press and released at an Historical Society meeting in May.

Beck interviewed more than 80 people for the book, because Joe Wright rarely got his name in print. Wright, who died at age 93 in 1972, was a "folk preacher, folk musician, maker of traditional furniture and maker of traditional musical instruments," Beck said. Wright believed in a theory known as "British Israelism," the belief that the British people were the descendants of the Lost Tribes of Israel. He was the preacher for an independent congregation in Goshen for many years.

Wright is also well known for his unusually shaped musical instruments.

Beck first became interested in Wright in 1981 and bought a Wright string bass at an auction. "It is not often that the 'short and simple annals of the poor' can be assembled as a memorial to them as well as for the benefit of posterity. I am pleased to be associated with such a project in honor of Joe Wright. He probably would not have liked me — the academic type — very much, but I admire him and his achievement," Beck writes in the book's foreword.

Priced at $5, the book is on sale at the GC bookstore, Kline's department store and at the Elkhart County Historical Museum in Bristol. Books also may be ordered through Beck.

Faculty identify future church leaders

Goshen College is working at leadership development for the Mennonite Church.

Responding to a Campus Ministries invitation, 20 members of the faculty recommended 109 students who they felt might consider church-leadership vocations.

"Many of us make contacts with students about church-leadership vocations throughout the academic year here, but this is an additional effort in the waning moments of spring," said campus minister Keith Graber Miller.

"These are what I call low-key nudges, inviting students to consider the possibility of using their gifts in the service of God and humanity as church leaders," he said.

As follow-up to the faculty suggestions, the students were informed of the recommendation and were invited to talk further with the campus minister. About 57 persons on the list were men and 52 were women; many of them were upperclass students.

Some of the vocational suggestions included working in Mennonite church agencies, teaching in Mennonite schools or colleges and serving as lay leaders in congregations. Other possible church-leadership vocations were in areas of board membership, counseling, pastoring and communications.

Fellowships, internships awarded

Ten Goshen College students worked with faculty members this spring as interns or fellows at GC facilities.

Two students received fellowships for summer work in the Turner Precision X-Ray Laboratory. A. Jeremy Kropf received a Turner Laboratory Fellowship and Mark A. Guengerich received the first University of Notre Dame-Turner Laboratory Undergraduate Fellowship.

Kropf is a sophomore majoring in physics and mathematics from Elkhart, Ind. In the Turner Laboratory, he is working with thin films of titanium nitride, using a new thin-film diffractometer constructed for the laboratory by Jonathan Baer, a 1987 Turner Fellow.

Guengerich is a sophomore physics major from Goshen, Ind. The University of Notre Dame-Turner Laboratory Undergraduate Fellowship is funded through grants received by UND Professor Jacek Furdyna for his research. Furdyna is the Aurora and Tom Marquez professor of physics at Notre Dame.

"Professor Furdyna is one of the world's foremost authorities in the development of diluted magnetic semiconductors," said Carl Helrich, GC professor of physics. "These materials are on the forefront of research in condensed-matter physics."

Guengerich began work in April. He is performing a composition analysis of zinc selenide crystals grown by Professor Furdyna's research group. "The work will be performed at Goshen College, but in close contact with Professor Furdyna, giving Mark the opportunity to become involved with one of the world's foremost research groups," Helrich said.

Eight elementary-education majors served as Lyall Interns at the Merry Lea Environmental Learning Center during its busy May season. Larry Yoder, Merry Lea director, estimated that 1,600 school children from the Merry Lea area visited the facility during May.

The Lyall Internships are funded by the Lyall Electric Co., Kendallville, Ind., to enrich the educational experiences available to children in northeastern Indiana. The 1988 Lyall Interns were Kristi R. Goering, a senior from Hudson, Mich.; Teresa G. Hertzler '86, from Elkhart, Ind.; Cynthia M. Hockman, a sophomore from Hubbard, Ore.; Susan M. Hunsberger, a junior from Goshen; Gail A. Roth, a sophomore from Wauseon, Ohio; Nancy D. Sauder, a junior from Archbold, Ohio; Beth A. Waidelich, a senior from Archbold, and Wanda E. Zehr, senior from Woodstock, Ontario.

Merry Lea receives grant

The Merry Lea Environmental Learning Center of Goshen College received a $1,500 grant from the John Q. and Hester Adams Trust, Columbia City, Ind., in May. The award will help underwrite direct costs associated with field instruction provided at Merry Lea for Whitley County (Ind.) schools during 1988.

"We intend for Merry Lea to be an asset to the area, as both a nature preserve and as an educational facility of the highest quality," Larry Yoder, Merry Lea director, said. "In the 1986-87 school year, use of Merry Lea by Whitley County students rose 51 percent." The 700 Whitley County students visiting Merry Lea ranged from kindergarten students to high-school biology students.

Ministry-inquiry program initiated

This summer two GC students are participating in a program for persons interested in exploring pastoral ministry.

Judy Ingold, a sophomore Bible and religion major from Goshen, Ind., is an intern at College Mennonite Church, Goshen, and Duane Beck, a junior music major from Archbold, Ohio, is an intern at Central Mennonite Church, Archbold.

Both students are part of a new Ministry Inquiry Program, a program designed to help students test whether to pursue further preparation for ministry. The internship offers them exposure to pastoral ministry in a congregational setting with a supervising pastor.

Will join faculty

Ten appointments to the Goshen College faculty have been announced by Dean Willard Martin.

Frances Weaver Grill will be an assistant professor of nursing, teaching medical-surgical nursing and Level II courses. A native of Elkhart, Grill received a B.S. in nursing from Indiana University in 1976 and a M.S. in nursing from the State University of New York in 1986. She will join the faculty in January, 1989.

Randall P. Horst will be an assistant professor of art. A 1983 graduate of Goshen College, Horst also graduated from Hesston College in 1979 and received a M.F.A in drawing from Bowling Green (Ohio) State University in 1986. He is a native of Littleton, Colo., and has been teaching at Bowling Green State University.

Ronald A. Johnson will be an assistant professor of communication and general manager for WGCS. He received a bachelor's degree in media management from Marietta (Ohio) College in 1980 and a master's degree in radio-television management from Kansas State University in 1988. He is a native of Pleasant Plain, Ohio, and has three years' experience in professional radio.

James S. Logan, a 1984 graduate of Goshen College, will be the resident director of Yoder Residence Hall. He received a master's degree from Goshen Biblical Seminary in 1987, and has worked as an adviser to the Black Student Union during the 1987-88 school year.

David J. Miller will be the program coordinator at the Merry Lea Environmental Learning Center of Goshen College at Wolf Lake, Ind. An entomologist, Miller received a bachelor's degree in Bible from Eastern Mennonite College in 1964, a master's degree in entomology from the University of Delaware in 1972 and a doctoral degree in entomology from Michigan State University in 1977. He has run his own firm, Architectural Wood Products, since 1979 in Mason, Mich. The program coordinator position is a new position at Merry Lea.

Carol J. Smith will be an assistant professor of mathematics and also will teach computer science courses. A native of South Bend, Ind., Smith graduated from Manchester College in 1979 with high distinction. She received an M.A. degree from Illinois State University in 1971 and an M.S. degree from the University of Illinois at Chicago in 1984. She has worked at the AT&T Bell Laboratories for the last three years.

Brenda J. Srof will be an assistant professor of nursing. A 1982 graduate of Goshen College, she received a M.S.N. from Oral Roberts University in 1986. She is a native of Henderson, Neb.

Timothy J. Stalter will be an assistant professor of music and will direct the Jazz Band and the Chorale. A 1985 graduate of Goshen College, he received a master's degree in choral conducting from the University of Illinois in 1988.

His wife, Kristine Summers Stalter, also a 1985 graduate of Goshen College, will hold a non-faculty position in the music department. She will supervise music education students and assist Lon Sherer in the strings preparatory program. She received a master's degree in music education from the University of Illinois in 1988.

Rebecca J. Hochstedler, a 1987 graduate of Goshen College, will be the resident director of Coffman, Westlawn and Kulp residence halls and co-director of small-group housing. She also is a 1981 graduate of Hesston College. She has worked as a social worker at the Greencroft Nursing Center in Goshen since her graduation.

Philip A. Thomas, also a 1987 graduate of Goshen College, will be the resident director for Kratz and Miller residence halls, co-director of small-group housing and director of senior-floor housing. He is a 1985 graduate of Hesston College.

Faculty receive Pew grants

Three college professors are doing research this summer at Goshen College under grants from the Pew Science Program.

They are Donald G. Clemens, Goshen College professor of chemistry; Carl S. Helrich, Jr., Goshen College professor of physics, and David R. Renneke, professor of physics at Augustana College, Rock Island, Ill.

The grants were received through the Great Lakes "cluster" of institutions in the Pew Science Program. Besides Goshen College, the other members of the cluster are Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill.; Albion (Mich.) College; Augustana College, Rock Island, Ill.; Luther College, Decorah, Iowa, and Wheaton (Ill.) College.

Clemens was funded for eight weeks of work on a project to isolate novel organic compounds from marine algae. He hopes to isolate "secondary metabolites" from the algae and identify these substances. Clemens worked on a similar project at the Scripps Institution of Oceanography, La Jolla, Calif., during his sabbatical in the 1986-87 school year.

Helrich is working on a theoretical study of magnetic susceptibility in diluted magnetic semiconductors. He also will work with Renneke, who is studying oxidation of the surface on titanium nitride thin films using a thin-film diffractometer. Renneke began work June 1 in Goshen College's Turner Precision X-Ray Laboratory.

A. Jeremy Kropf, a Goshen College sophomore, is assisting Renneke and Helrich. Their project also involves developing new techniques to study surfaces and films with X-ray diffraction and enhancing computer interfacing in the Turner Laboratory.

The Pew Science Program is an initiative of The Pew Charitable Trusts, Philadelphia, Pa. The goal of the program is to encourage undergraduates to major in science and mathematics, improve the teaching of science to non-science majors and allow faculty members at four-year colleges to conduct research. The program set up the cluster system so that colleges and universities can pool their efforts and resources.

The Great Lakes cluster to which Goshen College belongs received a $1,127,000 grant in March, 1988, to set up a program. The 1988 faculty research grants are the first awarded under the program.

A radical vision for international education

An interview with Paul Mininger

Although the vision for making international education a required part of general education at GC was not the idea of any one person, it was the persistence and prodding of GC president Paul Mininger, more than anyone else, that focused the vision and kept it alive.

Mininger talked about the origins of SST in a recent interview.

Question: Where did the idea for SST come from?

Mininger: In the fall of 1965 I appointed a Committee on the Future of the College to work with me in thinking about alternative futures for Goshen College. I had in mind four things: to work further on the implications of our being a Christian college and improving the Christian character of the GC program; to find ways for the college to operate more effectively and efficiently; to respond to the concerns of students for more imput into the operation of the college, and to find ways to utilize resources for education beyond the campus.

Question: So SST developed from that committee?

Mininger: The committee developed what we called "The Goshen Plan." It included SST, but many other ideas as well — the year-round operation of the college, a tri-level classification of students, a revised set of general-education requirements, all courses the same size and small courses for special studies. Some of the elements in our plan fell by the wayside, but international education prevailed.

Question: What was your vision for international education?

Mininger: What we were doing was enlarging on and spelling out the meaning of our motto, "Culture for Service." It was to be a combination of cultural activity and Christian service.

Specifically, we wanted to do several things. We wanted to expose students to another culture and have them understand that another culture can have integrity as well as their own. We believed that if students would look at their own culture through the eyes of people of another culture, they would better understand themselves and would be able to critically evaluate their own culture. As a result of the whole experience, they would be better able to form independent judgments and commitments.

We also wanted students to have contact with scholars in another culture, so that they would realize that intellectual development is not something uniquely American or Western.

We believed it was very important that students learn through experience and participation, and not only through reading books, listening to lectures and discussions. That would be done in small groups in a way that did not happen on campus. The small group experience could be important, and we hoped that some aspects of the model could be brought back to the campus.

We also thought that it would be very good for students to develop an intense relationship with a few faculty and to be exposed to human needs in a Third-World situation. The plan was that students would not just observe human need, but that they would also act to meet some of those needs. We wanted students to take action on behalf of other persons, an action that would have moral consequences.

We wanted students to be in dialogue with people of other religions. We also thought that they could witness to their faith and become mediators in areas of the world where there was conflict and where people may have felt hostile to the U.S.

We hoped that personal Christian commitments would be made or deepened and that some young people might respond to the call of the church for service overseas.

As a practical matter we also saw SST as a way to reduce costs by making the college facilities serve more people.

Finally, we thought that the entire plan would give a distinctive character to the college that would attract students.

The overall goal was to develop Christian world citizens.

Question: Were there things that gave you anxiety about the program?

Mininger: We wondered how much freedom students could handle and about potential conflicts with the host communities. But we tested it out with three trial units in the summer of 1967. Roy and Fern Umble led a unit in Barbados, Marion and Fran Wenger led a unit in Haiti, and Virgil Miller, a faculty member at Bluffton College, led a unit in Bogota, Colombia. The reports from all three units were very positive.

Question: Is there anything else about the program that stands out in your mind?

Mininger: It is important to note that this vision and the program to implement it were the combined product of members of the Committee on the Future of the College, the conviction and commitment of the entire faculty and the diligence and hard work of Henry Weaver. He worked with divisions, departments and individual faculty members in solving the many practical problems of initiating the new program.

We worked together on it for many months and the technical problems at times seemed insurmountable. Henry Weaver's creative mind and his patience and persistence in the face of difficulties, together with the belief of the faculty in the basic idea, resulted in a unanimous vote by the faculty to adopt the program.

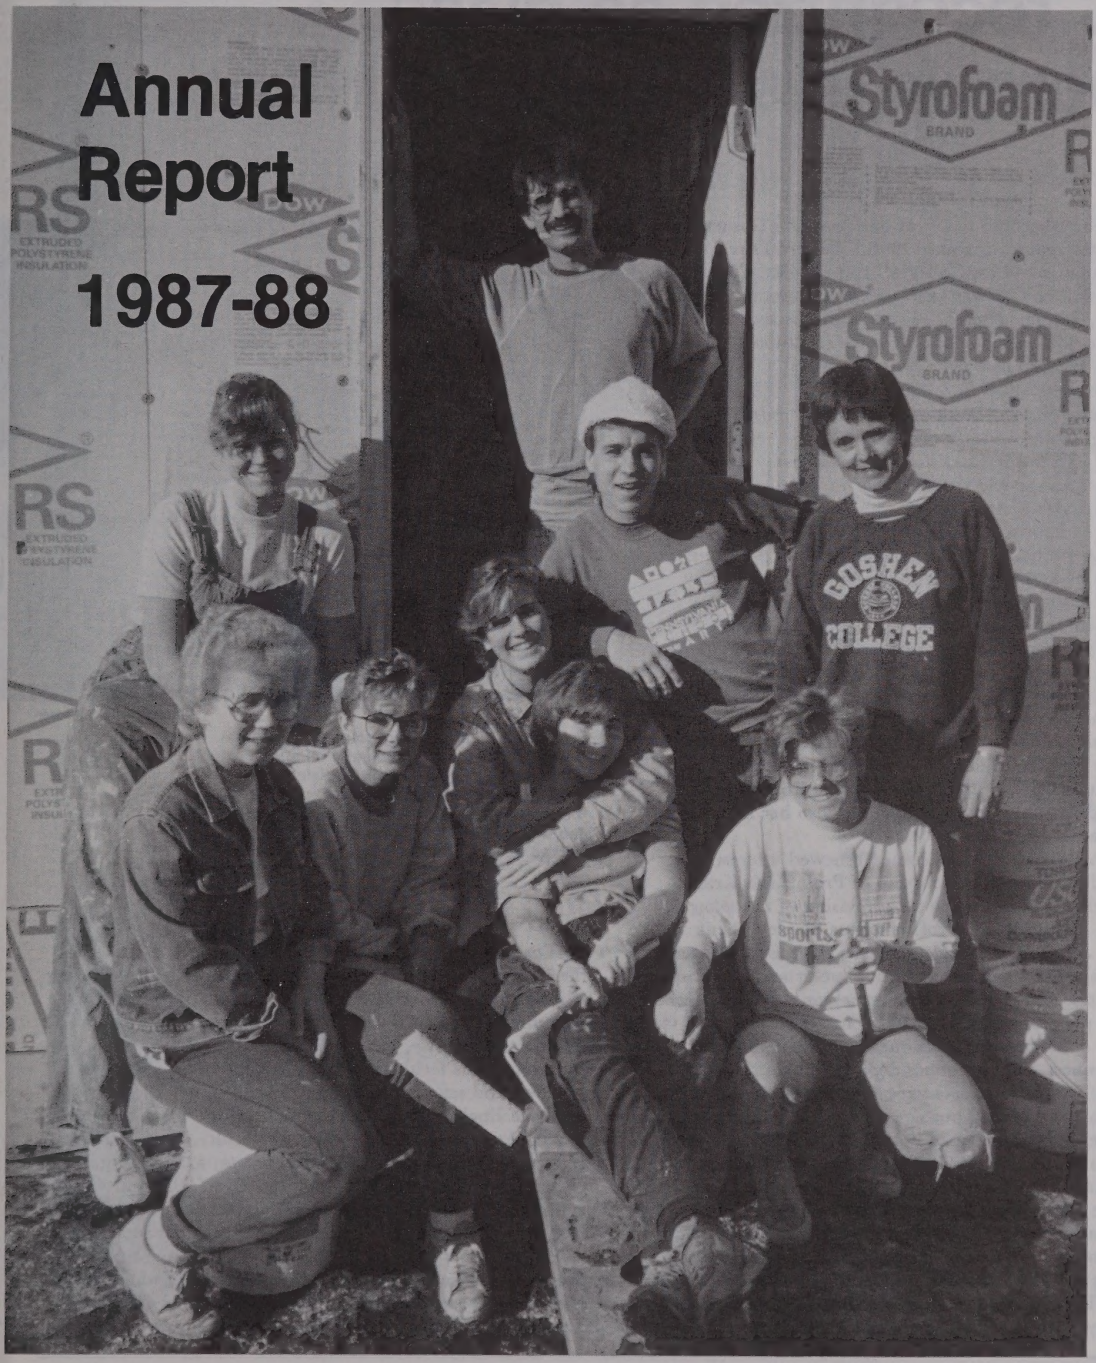
Goshen College Bulletin

Annual Report 1987-88



GC recognized as place where values taught and lived

By Victor Stoltzfus

The 1987-88 school year was one in which Goshen College was again recognized by the U.S. News & World Report "America's Best Colleges" survey (Oct. 26, 1987 issue). Although GC was called a "hidden gem" in the magazine, another reference in the same issue gratified us even more. GC was one of only three institutions of higher education selected as a place where "ethical values were lived as well as taught."

Our Study-Service Term program is the most visible example of living values as well as teaching them. However, I believe GC's faculty and staff teach values by example in many other less visible ways. A year in the life of Goshen College includes a vigorous program of classes, student activities, campus ministries, chapels and convocations, counseling and health services, residence-hall programs and public events and the supporting services of our library, computer services, and administrative departments.

Of course, they all support the majors and minors of our academic program in and out of the classroom. In addition, they offer our students the example of a Christian community dealing daily with life in a way that demonstrates both religious and intellectual integrity.

For instance, the art department initiated its endowed Eric Yake Kenagy Memorial Lectureship with a two-day visit by Ruth Duckworth, noted ceramist from Chicago. She shared not only her technique but also her life's experience as an artist.

The Bible department welcomed renewed interest in peace studies under the leadership of Prof. Ruth Krall. Prof. Marlin Jeschke completed a revision of Discipling the Brother for Herald Press. Prof. emeritus Stanley Shenk published Mission in Asia. Department chair Don Blosser was very active on campus as an instructor and off campus in conference and congregational speaking. Historian John Roth and philosopher Caleb Miller, newer faculty members, enhanced the department.

Our business and economics department continued to grow. The faculty members gave several adult-education seminars on and off campus.

The science division spent a great deal of time planning a renovation of, and an 18,000-square-foot addition to, Science Hall. Science faculty members also utilized our 1,100-acre Merry Lea Environmental Learning Center. Merry Lea serves more than 5,000 visitors annually. The marine biology program on Long Key, Fla., continued to attract our own students and approximately 50 high-school students. The Turner Precision X-Ray Measurements Laboratory studied crystals of silicon and quartz. Its sensitive equipment, designed by Prof. Robert Buschert, is the most accurate in the world. Goshen also is participating with Northwestern University and five other small colleges in a three-year Pew Science Program grant of more than $1 million to stimulate science teaching and research. The program funds faculty research, student participation in research and science seminars.

In the English department, Pinchpenny Press published five books by students and three by faculty. Prof. Daniel Hess wrote the script for Journeys of Hope, a Mennonite Central Committee film on refugees. Prof. Rosemary Wyse ended nine years of distinguished service. Carl Barnett, a linguist with teaching experience in China, will replace her.

Joann Burnett continues to lead our foods and nutrition program. Goshen is one of eight Indiana institutions to offer an approved American Dietetic Association program. The computer science department opened a new, additional microcomputer laboratory for classroom instruction in communication and accounting and for general student use. The new lab, with 26 microcomputers and printers, is in the basement of Kratz-Miller residence hall. Funds from the Lilly Endowment, Inc., Indianapolis, made the new lab possible.

Enrollment rose again in our teacher-education program, which won accreditation from the state of Indiana for the maximum five-year period. Prof. Kathleen Gnagey Short lectured on reading to conferences in the U.S., Canada and Australia. The Laboratory Kindergarten, directed by Prof. Kathryn Aschliman, helped another class of 20 children discover the wonder of God's world by exposing them to nesting hens, hatching eggs and hundreds of intriguing things to see and do. The kindergarten's state accreditation also was renewed for the maximum period.

Foreign-language enrollments are rising, due in part to a more rigorous proficiency requirement for SST. The professors are pleased that the Instructional Materials Center has installed a new satellite dish. Thanks to four alumni donors, we now tune in TV programs in Spanish, French and German.

The Hispanic ministries program, directed by Prof. José Ortiz, worked with the Mennonite Board of Missions to produce a series of videos on church administration. Professor Ortiz wrote a book, published by the Mennonite Publishing House in August, 1988, for Spanish-speakers who are new Mennonites. For the first time, Hispanic ministries students worked as interns in Christian service in Ponce, Puerto Rico, this summer.

In history, Prof. Theron Schlabach continues to edit the series of new books on the Mennonite experience in America. He completed his own volume in the series during the year. Prof. John Roth became director of the Mennonite Historical Library, replacing Prof. John Oyer, who served capably in that position for 12 years. The MHL now has more than 40,000 books and periodicals in many languages from four centuries of Mennonite history. In 1987-88, the library corresponded with 75 persons doing genealogical research, assisted countless other genealogists who visited the MHL itself and helped with 184 other research projects.

The music department, along with community musicians and guest soloists, presented The Creation by Haydn. The Fort Wayne Chamber Orchestra presented one of four guest concerts given on campus. Prof. David Mosley completed his Ph.D. in humanities at Emory University. Prof. Lon Sherer published a small book, Practicing: A Liturgy of Self-Learning, to acclaim.

The division of nursing graduated a class of 36 this spring. Goshen College is concerned about the decrease in students majoring in nursing. Rising salaries and a critical shortage in nurses throughout the nation convince us that more students will choose to major in nursing. One of the division's 1987-88 highlights was its reaccreditation for the maximum eight-year period by the National League for Nursing.

Student interest in sociology, social work, anthropology and psychology continued. Two new psychology courses were added: "Prosocial Behavior," which focuses on altruism, and "Applied Psychology." A new major and minor in theater were approved within the communication department. With the financial support of Mennonite Board of Missions, the communication department also provided an academic home for two new courses in sign language. In the collegiate studies department, Prof. Shirley Showalter provided special support for students still deciding on a major.

In the physical education department, Prof. Dwain Hartzler completed his first year as men's athletic director and Prof. Linda (Pert) Shetler served as women's athletic director. The baseball diamond was rebuilt and fenced. Goshen's combined strengths in academics and athletics were shown by the National Association for Intercollegiate Athletics scholar-athlete awards in cross-country, soccer and

Many other faculty members provided distinguished service to our students, to their professional associations, to their churches and to the Elkhart County community. We all can affirm the way the faculty, staff and students worked together to create a community of learning and faith in 1987-88.

However, the Board of Overseers and the administration realize that a gap exists between the high level of GC's nationally recognized programs and the level of GC's faculty salaries and available facilities. The board and administration will work throughout the coming year to raise the funds to make improved salaries and facilities possible, to enable GC's continuing to be a place where faculty, staff and students can live their values.

Approximately 40 high-school students from all over the United States enjoyed the facilities of GC's Marine Biology Laboratory at Layton, Fla., on Long Key during two sessions of Marine Biology Week in July, 1988. Under the director of Prof. Jonathan Roth, the teen-agers snorkeled, collected samples and mapped plant and animal life.

The "Saturday Wilderness Leadership Program," a pilot program at the Merry Lea Environmental Learning Center, expanded Merry Lea's outreach into the community. The enrichment program for persons ages 10 to 14 met once a month for activities indoors and outdoors. Ann Linvill, a social worker from Whitley County, Ind., was one of the program leaders. In the photo, Linvill helps program participants make Christmas wreaths.

GC support strong in the face of economic uncertainty

By Ron Gunden

This year was one of significant economic uncertainty and fluctuation as we experienced Black Monday, an ominous federal budget deficit, balance-of-trade issues and the falling value of the dollar.

These issues might have been expected to have a trickle-down effect on the economic health of a small college, especially Goshen College, with our modest endowment and heavy dependence on annual gifts.

However, Goshen's many supporters — alumni, friends and businesses — again contributed generously and we ended our 49th consecutive year without a deficit. Below are some highlights of the Goshen College Fund (unrestricted giving):

- alumni — $694,166
- business and industry — $197,009
- church — $552,046
- other sources — $253,710
- total unrestricted giving — $1,696,931.

Total contributions from all sources in 1987-88 were $3,357,600. They include:

- $968,207 added to the endowment
- $406,400 in various types of life-income plans
- $1,784,743 total alumni giving (unrestricted and restricted)
- $1,652,099 total Associates giving.

We are grateful for the generous support from Goshen's many friends which helps build and maintain a strong academic program. We look forward to 1988-89 — to our 50th consecutive year of operating within our budget.

Deferred giving report

In 1987-88, matured estate and deferred gifts to Goshen College totaled $84,468. Most of these gifts came from alumni. Gifts were received from these estates:

Pearl Aschliman
Christian Graber '28
Earl Kreider '31
Betty Lowenstein
Esther Snyder '27
Letha Steiner '32
Lillian Wought
Matilda Yoder '16

These individuals gave deferred gifts:

Clifford '57 and Lois Yake Kenagy '47
Tilman '28 and Luella Schertz Smith '30

Twenty-two deferred-gift plans were written during the year. College alumni and friends chose from a variety of deferred gift plans: gift annuity, life insurance, pooled income, deferred-payment-gift annuity, charitable-remainder uni-trust and annuity trust, revocable trusts. Participants in these plans were:

Florence Badertscher Amstutz '35
Atlee '35 and Winifred Nelson Beechy '38
Paul and Ruth Bowman
Ralph '50 and Opal Barkey Gunden '45
Grace Steiner Hostetler '26
Lester Hostetler '15

Elkhart County and Goshen College

Goshen College enjoys a flourishing relationship with the surrounding area, especially Elkhart County. Currently, more than 4,000 GC alumni live in the county.

The college provides unique sports, cultural and educational activities for the community, and the community responds with strong financial and other support.

Each year area business and industry managers enroll in a Management Development Program offered by the business and economics department.

Last year Elkhart County residents (including alumni and other friends), churches, businesses and foundations gave to restricted and unrestricted funds. The following figures show the community support:

Goshen College Fund	1987-88 Gifts
Business and industry	$ 69,633
Foundations	4,745
Mennonite churches	140,907
Alumni	204,421

Record $552,046 from churches

Mennonite congregations and conferences remain strong supporters of Goshen College, in terms of sending both students and money. During 1987-88, 649 students — 68.5 percent of the student body — came from Mennonite congregations. Congregations and conferences also sent $552,046, up $84,492 — 18.1 percent, from last year's record giving to the Goshen College Fund.

The following Mennonite conferences financially supported the college in 1987-88:

Allegheny Conference
Atlantic Coast Conference
Church Communities
Franconia Conference
Illinois Conference
Indiana-Michigan Conference
Iowa-Nebraska Conference
Lancaster Conference
New York State Fellowship
Northwest Conference
Ohio Conference
Ontario Conference
Pacific Coast Conference
Rocky Mountain Conference
Southeast Conference
Western Ontario Conference

Matching gifts increase

Last year 97 corporations gave $65,052 to match their employee's contributions to Goshen College. This is an increase of nearly $10,000 over the previous year.

More than 1,000 companies in the United States participate in matching-gift programs. Contributions are doubled or even tripled when the proper corporate forms are completed and sent to Goshen College with your gift. For more information, contact the college or your personnel office.

Alumni notes

1900-19

Deaths

Raymond L. Hartzler '18, husband of Nora Burkholder Hartzler '21, Mennonite Hospital, Bloomington, Ill. 61701, June 27.

Rose Schertz Nofsinger '19, Eureka, Ill., June 21.

1920-29

Death

Ernest G. Gehman '24, husband of Margaret Martin Gehman, 1531 Hillcrest Drive, Harrisonburg, Va. 22801, June 29. He was professor emeritus of German at Eastern Mennonite College, where he taught 1924-73. An ordained minister for 50 years, he was pastor of Morning View Mennonite Church near Singers Glen, Va.

Notes

Bill Hallman '29, Tilman Smith '28, Joe Buzzard '30 and Paul Troyer, all residents of Greencroft, call themselves the Greencroft Grampas. They entertain audiences with songs, humor and numbers played on the saw. They stand tall and sing as clearly as their 80-year-old voices will allow.

Leroy '41 and Louella Eash Hostetler '25, Chattanooga, Tenn., celebrated their 60th wedding anniversary on May 31 at Niagara Falls. Leroy retired as general manager of Lanham's Bible Bookshop in May.

1930-39

Deaths

Martin Reimer, husband of Kathryn Truex Berkey Reimer (staff '62-81), 503 S. Greene Road, Goshen, July 23.

Marriage

Ronald Wyckoff (faculty '76-79, '81-82), Logan, Ohio, and Marty Kolb, June 18.

Births

John and Lorraine Troyer Miller (staff '84-45), Palmyra, Mo., Rebecca Joy, born May 21, 1988, received for adoption June 3.

David and Karen Mosley (faculty '86-), Goshen, Philip David, July 25.

Michael and Judy Schlabaugh Oesch (staff '76-81), Middlebury, Ind., Lisa Kay, July 18.

Dan and Kelly Schrock (staff '87-), Goshen, Anthony David, July 15.

Notes

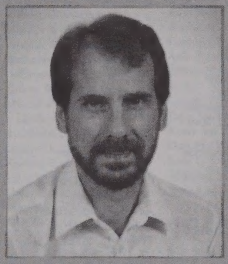
Goldie Ivory (faculty '71-72, '75-81, '87-), South Bend, Ind., has been elected to the board of directors of the National Association of Social Workers. She represents Indiana, Kentucky, Ohio and West Virginia.

Keith Graber Miller (faculty '87-) earned a master of divinity degree from Goshen Biblical Seminary in May.

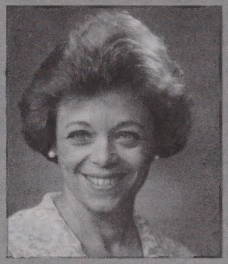
Perry and Delores Miller (staff '81-87) have begun a two-year term of voluntary service with Western Mennonite High School, Salem, Ore. Perry will work in the maintenance department and Delores will work in the cafeteria.

Catherine Mumaw (faculty '74-86), Corvallis, Ore., directed a five-day international training program on "Technology for Improving Family Economic Well-Being" at the University of Minnesota, St. Paul, July 17-22, just preceding the XVIth World Congress of the International Federation for Home Economics.

Hochstetler



Kennell



Sheeler

Three people have been named by the Alumni Association Board of Directors for election to the Board. They will take the places vacated by outgoing members Lois Yake Kenagy '47, Don Troyer '71 and Tom Yoder '59.

Lucile Conrad Hochstetler '51 is a free-lance travel escort and substitute teacher. She and Dale '51 are parents of four grown children, including Jerome '75 and Jay '81. The Hochstetlers now live in Hesston, Kan., and attend Hesston Mennonite Church where Lucile serves as church hostess. In 1980 they spent two months as volunteers with International Executive Service Corps, then went on to Zaire and Jamaica under MCC and MEDA.

Tom Kennell '74 is a partner in Kennell Farms in Eureka, Ill., an 850-acre grain and hog farm. He is active in professional and church activities and is a member of the Woodford County Pork Producers Board of Directors. At the Roanoke Mennonite Church, he is elder, youth sponsor and teacher and delegate to the Illinois Conference. He and Lynn Canal Kennell '76 are parents of Ariel, age 4, and Stephanie, age 2.

Lorraine Murphy Sheeler '64 is minister of Christian education at the Bay Shore Mennonite Church and part-time activities assistant at Sunnyside Village Retirement Center, both in Sarasota, Fla.

These individuals are recommended by the Alumni Board. Following action by the Alumni Association at the Oct. 8 annual meeting, their three-year terms take effect.

We wish to thank Lois, Don and Tom for their unfailing enthusiasm, participation and support for Board activities and their Alma Mater.

Are we to be heroic?

By John D. Nyce, Interim Academic Dean

Editor's Note: On Aug. 31, the Goshen College faculty met for the dean's workshop, an annual starting event for the school year. This year, the Faculty Development Committee structured the workshop around the theme, "Philosophy of Education: Christian Perspectives and the Liberal Arts." Two books, The Critical Years by Sharon Parks and The Closing of the American Mind by Allan Bloom, were made available to the faculty for six weeks before the workshop. After presentations on the books, the faculty discussed them. These are comments Dean Nyce gave at the workshop.

As educators we experience our task to be challenging, stimulating, frustrating or even debilitating. But we have chosen to be in the profession and at Goshen College — a Christian college. Why? A fundamental reason is our sense of commitment to the students who come to us — really, what other reason is there? That commitment guides our journey through life (and faith); it motivates us to deep involvement with the next generation of imagination and faith.

Teachers have, for us, provided stimulus and insights into faith which have sparked our imagination and guided our own continuing faith journey. Now, for the next generation, we have become 'they.' How have we perceived that role? That is a primary focus for our discussion, stimulated by Sharon Parks' invigorating book. She articulates the role of Christian faculty who are personally in the "quest for wisdom — that rich blend of experience and knowledge that manifests itself as sagacious judgment and informed love."

From some perspectives this can be a daunting task. We can translate it into a combination of exaggerated, but meaningful, memories of 'our teachers' and the seeming demand to be heroic ourselves. Parks chooses to emphasize not the hero image but the mentor image, which, to me, seems more approachable. Let me explore some implications of the faculty person as mentor (influenced by Parks).

The "passion and potential of the student" should be most fundamental. We are invigorated by the opportunity to "ourselves address and empower" the students' imagination. In fact, we are even challenged to envision the potential of students, beyond what they have yet imagined, to "invite that into public life." For such mentoring to occur, we strive for vitality, integrity, quality and reality in our individual lives and in the community we create here.

About what are we excited? If not by our task as educators, then we should not be surprised when students fail to respond. We can agree with Parks that "the most effective educators are those who engage their discipline (or administrative responsibility) because in the context of that discipline they have found access to transcendent meaning." Do we really show to students that the investment of being enmeshed in the ongoing "composing of faith" is significant? How often do we share with them the basis of our being and knowing? This act is neither ego satisfaction nor indoctrination but a vital stimulus to Goshen College students' own search for faith.

We do this with integrity when we speak the truth from our experience. The community context on campus reveals to students to what extent we have become integrated ourselves. No, we may not be a church, but we are a community of Christians. Together we experience "shipwreck," the struggle and resulting true joy in our own growth process. We must reflect on how we demonstrate this integrity to students — now! We can teach either that "meaning-makers" and their sense of reality should stay intact (once defined) OR that the process continues, even through failures, to be conformed more closely to divine truth. Do we genuinely, openly acknowledge failures and mutually seek growth? Our own growth journey in faith is toward that capacity for movement into self-conscious interdependence — as mature adults.

We do not connect with students unless there is a quality and reality to both process and content. What we teach flows from the sense of quality both we and students feel in how the task is done. It also flows from the reality of our individual and collective lives. Only then can we "make sense" to the experience of our students. We at Goshen currently use some 'experiential' methods, but we need to define better those real tasks to which we can call students. They, by doing those tasks responsibly, can re-join truth and moral act so that their faith can be recomposed.

Finally, let us remember that as mentors we need the students even as much as they may need us. Our own "generativity is dependent upon meaningful, faithful connection with the next generation." In that connnection we are caught by the young-adult power to stimulate imagination. That mutual dependence is true motivation to us and the students. When their passionate energy for the ideal combines with our imaginative mentoring as mature adults, that is a unique, even divine moment of promise.

Let us support each other in this divine moment!

College Bulletin

About this issue

Our July 1988 Bulletin introduced a year-long focus on Study-Service Term at Goshen College in recognition of the SST program's 20th anniversary.

This month's Bulletin features photos and reports from Festival Internationale, the month-long campus celebration of international education. Nearly 1,000 alumni, parents and friends were on campus Oct. 7-9 for presentations by host-country visitors, question-and-answer sessions about the socio-economic situation in SST locations, a Haitian art exhibit, class reunions and a banquet. Special speakers included Costa Rica's foreign minister, Rodrigo Madrigal Nieto, and Notre Dame's president emeritus, the Rev. Theodore Hesburgh. The festival concluded Saturday, Oct. 29, with an ethnic arts, crafts and food fair and a "Polish Gala."

In addition to coverage of the festival, this issue of Bulletin also includes several commentaries on unexpected origins and results of GC's international thrust. Edgar Metzler, a 1952 graduate, speaks about Goshen's international emphasis "long before SST was a gleam in the eyes of Paul Mininger and Henry Weaver." Ann Martin, assistant director of China Educational Exchange, highlights the exchange program's origin via GC and the breadth and depth of its present work.

Also, Professor Ruth Krall explains how her term as an SST leader in Costa Rica altered her pedagogy, committing her to more relational teaching. And President Victor Stoltzfus looks back at faculty members who served around the world in the 1940s and '50s.

The January and March issues of Bulletin will continue the international education theme. In January, we'll feature the impact SST has on GC students, while the March Bulletin will focus on the effects of SST on host countries.

Whether or not you've participated in the SST experience, we hope your reading stimulates fond recollections of Goshen's many decades of international connectedness.

Kreider credits many parents in SST birth

To the editor:

I was much interested in the special issue on SST (July 1988) with the outlining of steps leading to the launching of the program. In your editorial and in the reflections of Paul Mininger and Henry D. Weaver, I sense that SST had a virgin birth, a sui generis phenomena.

It seems strange that there is no acknowledgement of Goshen's participation in the international education program of the Council of Mennonite Colleges and the experimental service-credit program worked out between CMC and MCC. For a time, Henry was secretary of the CMC program.

Surely there was a broader context in the early '60s which contributed to SST: Peace Corps, the many emerging junior-year-abroad programs, the widespread curricular innovations (e.g., area studies), the mounting interest in development strategies in the Third World, and so on.

I realize it is tricky trying to establish the parentage of ideas, particularly when one seeks to confine it to one father and one mother.

During Edgar Metzler's first year at Goshen College (1948-49), these 18 international students were part of the student body. Pictured are, left to right: (front row) Regina Nussbaumer, Gertrude Gassmann, Eke Talsma, Ursula van Duhren, Ursula Beyer and Amparo Gonzalez; (second row) Pyarelal Malagar, Fidel Mercado, Gerhard von Beckerath, Tina van der Laag, Walter Hodel and Samuel Lehmann; (third row) Antonio Alvarez, Eliezer Rodriguez, Octavio Romero, Miguel Limardo, Adunya Makonnen and Minasse Haile. Under the photo in the 1949 Maple Leaf, editors wrote: "It is not only the foreign students who benefit from the exchange program, for they make an important contribution of their own to our campus life. As a result of the whole project (foreign student exchange), the ties of the brotherhood of churches separated by waters have been more closely bound together."

International orientation decades old

By Edgar Metzler

"The best way to send knowledge is to wrap it up in a person . . . Although one can read about different cultures and customs, only by actual association can they be fully understood and appreciated. It is like making a new discovery to find that people who come from such vastly different cultures can have so much in common and can gain much from each other."

A quote from the proposal to establish SST in 1968? No, these words were written in the 1950 Maple Leaf, describing the student-exchange program. That year 19 foreign students studied at Goshen College, and a group of GC students participated in work camps and study in Europe.

Prompted by World War II and its aftermath, the city of Goshen was only beginning to emerge from the cocoon of parochialism that characterized most American small towns. The Goshen City Directory listed the 1950 population as 12,945, with the following breakdown: "American born, 97.5 percent. Predominating nationalities of the foreign born: Greek, Italian, German, and English. No negroes." An African student and I were refused service at a local restaurant.

But on campus, my horizons were being pushed out to the world, conceptually and experientially. While recently reviewing pictures of international students at Goshen from 1948 to 1952, I noted those with whom I developed more than casual acquaintance as roommates, classmates and friends, and discovered they came from 16 countries in four continents. The term "cross-cultural" was not yet in vogue, but that describes a treasured part of my student experience.

What I learned from those friends about the sensitivities, hazards and joys of encounters across cultures was valuable beyond my imagination. They stimulated a curiosity about what makes us humans tick as cultural beings, with our similarities and differences. They provided a perspective that sharpened both my critique and my appreciation of my own culture. Years later, when I had the opportunity to oversee cross-cultural training for hundreds of Peace Corps volunteers in Asia, I realized that useful ways of perceiving and reacting to other cultures had begun back at GC.

Almost two decades before the start of SST, Goshen College provided me with many opportunities to train for global citizenship. There were three language clubs — German, French and Spanish. The Foreign Missions Fellowship brought to the campus representatives from churches in other countries. They were called "national leaders" to differentiate them from the "foreign missionaries." Sometimes they were introduced as "overseas visitors," which I always thought a bid odd since, for them, we were the ones "overseas."

Peace Society was a major organization with active participation by faculty members who provided strong role models for a faith orientation reaching across national and ethnic boundaries. Many of Goshen's professors had recently served abroad in relief and rehabilitation programs following World War II (see related article, p. 24). There were visiting professors from other countries. Goshen Biblical Seminary had not yet moved to Elkhart, and some in the student body were missionaries who had lived overseas.

It is not surprising that in the decade following World War II, Goshen College would be alive with international interest. This was a time of exploding world involvement through service and mission opportunities.

A significant expansion of my international awareness was during my junior year, when I worked as a student assistant to Harold S. Bender and Melvin Gingerich on the Mennonite Encyclopedia project. The encyclopedia included articles about Mennonites around the world. More important was Dean Bender's enthusiasm for the Mennonite World Conference. That zeal spilled over into office conversations, and brought many overseas visitors to the encyclopedia offices in the library basement (now the Visual Arts Building).

I remember, too, how moved I was when told about the Goshen student whose name is honored by Kratz Hall. In September 1920, GC junior Clayton Kratz sailed from New York with two other Mennonites (including Orie Miller, who had recently graduated from Goshen) for relief work in Russia. Caught behind the Bolshevik lines, Kratz was never heard from again.

What was the motivation for this amazing web of international connections, long before SST was a gleam in the eyes of Paul Mininger and Henry Weaver? The college motto, "Culture for Service," sounded like a cliche the first time I heard it. But I learned that it truly does express a conviction that early on moved Goshen into the wider world.

German Club officers for 1946-47 were, left to right, Lillian Oswald, treasurer; Beulah Marner, vice president; Evelyn Showalter, secretary; Paul Haarer, president; and Jacob Sudermann, sponsor. That year the German Club joined with the French and Spanish clubs to present the program "Christmas Awakening," a reminder that "Christmas is for all people the world over."

Some of my peers might read this testimony and raise an eyebrow, wondering if there really was that much international emphasis during those student days. I was lucky. When I arrived on campus, I already had been exposed to a larger world through my home. My father traveled widely for the church, and collecting and studying maps became one of my favorite hobbies. International visitors and North Americans who worked and traveled in other countries were often guests at our dinner table. I was prepped to take advantage of the global awareness and connections then at Goshen. My student experience focused an interest which would lead to lifelong challenges and pleasures in cross-cultural encounters overseas and at home. New generations of students introduced to cross-cultural realities through SST have a great opportunity and an equal responsibility. I hope the SST experience will enable them to provide a home environment and communities where children will grow up curious about and appreciative of the cultural richness of their world.

Edgar Metzler is associate secretary for congregational peace and social concerns at Mennonite Board of Congregational Ministries in Elkhart, Ind., and national coordinator for New Call to Peacemaking. From 1968 to 1975, he served with the Peace Corps in Nepal, India, Iran and Thailand. Over several decades, he also worked with Mennonite Central Committee in eight other Asian countries.

Leading SST convinces Krall relational teaching is best

By Ruth E. Krall

The decision to serve as leader of three Costa Rican SST units during the 1984-85 year was made during my last year of graduate studies in Los Angeles. Away from the college community, I needed to make my decision with little consultation from faculty peers.

In June 1984, I moved back to Goshen, and by mid-July was en route to San José. In the rush of preparations, there was little time for anxiety. When I arrived in Costa Rica with information gleaned from reading books and Goshen's files, culture shock was only a book idea.

Because I went to Costa Rica with so few preconceptions about what an ideal SST leader should be or do, I needed to experiment with the job's varied responsibilities. Bi-cultural realities became part of my personal learnings: for example, I learned early that it was uncomfortable to supervise a maid and gardener. The need for daily personal help offended my North American sense of independence. The year in Costa Rica became, therefore, a time and a place in which almost daily I confronted the inadequacies of my North American ideas and behavior in accomplishing the tasks of an SST leader. I was forced to examine the similarities and dissimilarities of my life in a second culture. Repeated, daily confrontations with the walls of cultural difference led to moments and days of confusion about what was real and what was imaginary in my own cultural awareness.

One of the learnings received from my SST year abroad and from the subsequent year of re-entry here continues to puzzle and to instruct me. Often students reached forward with laughter, cultural insights from their language teachers or host families, and with love, bridging my moments of personal failure, discomfort and weakness; times of loneliness and anxiety; and days of culture shock. They picked up roses downtown and brought them to the unit house, or sang funny songs at group sessions. With precise awareness, students sensed when I needed reassurance of my own value and place in the world. They said in words and behaviors, "We care about you, too." When they perceived that we were making a cultural mistake, they said, "My mother says this is how Costa Ricans feel about doing that."

Previously, my conception of teaching and learning was that the teacher was responsible to be strong, not weak; to be informed, not confused; to be loving and perceptive of students, not needful of love and perceptivity. I believed the teacher needed to be the expert and much better traveled on the learning road than the students she was given to teach.

But in Costa Rica, I was not an expert. I was not always strong. I was not always loving and culturally perceptive. For the most part, students were forgiving, supportive and accepting of our shared journey. Honesty about painful feelings and confusion did not appear to destroy their inner security nor did it seem to cause a lack of trust. Walking the same road as they did each day made us into co-learners. Mutual acknowledgement of the daily realities of our lives became more and more comfortable. Students grew in knowledge, curiosity and flexibility. They tested themselves each day as they met new bi-cultural realities in a variety of settings.

Now, in Goshen, teaching in more traditional classrooms, I still ask myself what it means to interact honestly with students so that we can be co-learners together. I am curious about what it means to see teaching as a form of love. I ponder the correlation of teacher expertness and student growth in wisdom as well as in factual knowledge. I wonder how students and teachers could benefit from a model of teaching and learning which assumes that each person shares responsibility for group learnings as well as her or his own. I ask if collaborative classrooms could help students generate more essential knowledge for themselves as well as for their classmates.

One enduring result of SST in my personal life has been this basic challenge to my theories of teaching and learning. I am more committed to relational teaching. I am more committed to assisting students as they define what they know and what they don't know. I no longer see student ignorance or weakness as something to be judged expertly from an objective, neutral point of view. Now, I am growing to understand this ignorance and weakness as a challenge for them and for me. I am realizing the importance of the subjective and deeply felt personal realities of the student in his or her learning situation.

Gradually, with students as my teachers and co-learners, I am reshaping my own views about good teaching. No longer do I see the transmission of factual material, even when done effectively, as sufficient pedagogy. Rather, I believe that teachers and students are engaged in a learning process in which consciousness is transformed from non-committed non-awareness into active, inquiring awareness.

I believe that a wholistic concern for the student's growh and maturation is essential. This concern for students is embedded within a relationship in which the teacher's own search for transformation and wholeness is authentic and visible to their view. Education, instead of being work which I do, has begun to feel like a vocation in which spiritual, personal and professional values have begun to merge. These values increasingly inform my life and work.

Educational exchange child of Goshen

By Ann Martin

In the spring of 1983, GC professor Atlee Beechy traveled to China's Sichuan province with a two-fold mission. He needed to negotiate the placement of a third batch of North American English teachers recruited by the young China Educational Exchange (CEE) program. And he also wanted Chinese officials to bless his successor as CEE director, Bert Lobe.

During the negotiations, it became clear the Chinese were resisting the leadership change. Lobe, who had just completed four years as MCC Asia secretary and was accompanying Beechy, recalls that "they wouldn't even make eye contact with me." He felt even more disheartened when the director of the higher education bureau asked for a private meeting with Beechy. "Do they consider me incompetent?" Lobe wondered.

The Chinese uneasiness, it turned out, had nothing to do with competence. Beechy, J. Lawrence Burkholder and Goshen College we know, the Chinese director reminded Beechy when they were alone. This new entity, CEE, and this new actor, Lobe, we don't know. If you don't mind, he urged, we would rather deal with our old friends.

CEE turns seven this year, but its foundation rests upon 40-year-old friendships formed by Burkholder when he did relief work in post-World War II China. In the late 1970s — the waning years of China's Cultural Revolution and global isolation — then-President Burkholder searched for GC's window of opportunity there. A fall 1980 SST unit led by Atlee and Winifred Beechy in Chengdu, Sichuan's capital, prompted the Chinese to encourage expansion. Couldn't Goshen College provide more teachers for longer terms? Goshen College alone could not, but cooperatively, perhaps Mennonite mission boards and agencies could. Goshen, an old friend, paved the way by providing a good reference for the new friend, which would become CEE.

Three English teachers were sent to Sichuan the following fall while GC and members of the Council of International Ministries (CIM) decided what shape a new era of Mennonite involvement in China should take. Pre-1949 foreign efforts in China were often diffuse; avoiding this model, CIM members agreed to join all of their China activities under one umbrella, officially named CEE on Jan. 17, 1982. For personnel, policies and funding, CEE would then look to CIM, other participating members such as Mennonite Medical Association and Mennonite Health Society, and Mennonite colleges.

This inter-Mennonite structure has worked well, although it does present a linguistic challenge to CEE's Chinese partners. Where they once dealt with only one modest acronym (GC) and town (Goshen), they must now tackle such baffling animals as MCC, EMBMC (Eastern Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities), COM (Commission on Overseas Mission), MBM/S (Mennonite Brethren Missions/Services), and MBM (Mennonite Board of Missions), based in exotic-sounding places such as Akron, Salunga, Newton, Winnipeg and Elkhart.

To further complicate the picture, Goshen College is now just one of 10 Mennonite colleges in the U.S. and Canada which have hosted 17 Chinese professors, 13 students and two nurses on behalf of CEE. "Are you from Goshen College?" many Chinese still ask CEEers. Enough GC faculty (Roy and Ethel Umble, Bill and Phyllis Miller, Wilbur and Fanni Birky) and alumni (18, including 11 former SSTers) have served one- or two-year CEE terms to perpetuate the myth that all CEEers hail from Goshen. No doubt many more years must pass before teachers are asked whether they come from Bethel, Bluffton, Canadian Mennonite Bible, Conrad Grebel, Eastern Mennonite, Fresno Pacific, Hesston, Mennonite Brethren Bible, Tabor College, or none of the above.

My own interest in China began in 1983 in the basement of GC's administration building, where for two years in Information Services I interviewed returned SSTers and SST leaders. Those back from China padded in and out of my office in funny black cotton shoes. Those in China mailed us their slides in quaint but sturdy wooden boxes. They all told quite exceptional tales of teaching, traveling, eating and making friends in the world's oldest continuous civilization. I came to feel that what they had done, I could do, too. China returnees often wield this Pied Piper power.

Since 1981, more than 100 people have gone to China to teach English, and 11 medical doctors, two nurses and five agriculturalists have worked there under CEE auspices. This year, 34 CEEers in 14 schools in four provinces are teaching not only future English teachers, but also students of agriculture, medicine, engineering and technology. More than half of these 34 are the only foreigners in their schools and, in some cases, their towns.

While it is great fun to go, it is also good to stay home and receive. CEE, to a far greater extent than most other programs of its type, takes seriously this receiving component. To this end, CEE and its partners have hosted about 60 Chinese teachers, students, doctors, nurses and agriculturalists, as well as five delegations of education officials. In 1988-89, the Chinese exchangees include three professors and three students at Mennonite colleges, one student in irrigation technology at Lethbridge (Alberta) Community College, a cardiologist, two veterinarians, and for the first time, two psychiatrists.

A sense of urgency compels many of the Chinese who come here — they have lost so much time and their country's needs are so great, whether for a rabies vaccine or new methods of teaching English as a second language. The purpose and intensity in their coming can make our going seem almost whimsical in contrast. Most CEEers might just as well have served in another of the 50 or so countries where Mennonite agencies have personnel, but most Chinese going abroad have been groomed for North America. Those who come and are hosted by CEE alumni usually reciprocate with similar hospitality to CEEers in China when they return home. In this way, the once-small circle of old friends grows ever wider.

Ann Martin worked in GC's Information Services office from 1983 to 1985 before going abroad for two years under China Educational Exchange. She now serves in Winnipeg as assistant director of CEE.

Madrigal suggests common pathways to peace

Editor's note: Rodrigo Madrigal Nieto, foreign minister of Costa Rica and one of the major architects of the Arias Central American peace plan, kicked off the October Festival Internationale with a speech titled "Costa Rica and Goshen College: Common Pathways to Peace." Excerpts of that powerful Oct. 7 presentation are reprinted below.

Goshen College is an institution strongly committed to academic excellence. Through the years, this college has been able to gain well-deserved prestige as an outstanding example of how knowledge and spirituality can forge a better professional, and a more balanced and happy individual. Your achievements in the arts and the letters, and your concern for social issues and the furthering of human values as opposed to sheer materialism are extraordinary. Above all, though, Goshen's commitment to peace has reached beyond the theoretical and become a distinctive trait of this university's character.

As a nation, Costa Rica has sought to accomplish somewhat similar objectives. For over a century, we have been building and upgrading our democratic institutions. Our forefathers understood the importance of enhancing the rule of law. Costa Rica has been a country of attorneys, not soldiers, since its birth. No special tribunal exists in the land; justice is common to all, and freedom of expression is one of our most cherished accomplishments.

With extraordinary foresight, our rulers realized that the value of human life could not be challenged, and thus they abolished the death penalty in 1882. They also forged a society where education played a central role, for they knew that wealth without knowledge is as incomplete as sowing without reaping.

Under the inspiring leadership of men who knew that the use of force can break the spirit but cannot foster economic and social progress, we abolished the army in 1948, consolidated the social institutions, and decentralized the state in order to make it more capable of solving the new challenges of the post-war period.

Today, as I speak in this forum, my country continues to struggle for peace and democracy in the turbulent waters of Central America. Stronger than ever in the past, we are still persuaded that stability is not lasting without freedom; that freedom is not real without pluralism; that pluralism is worthless without fairness; that development shall not come under the aegis of violence.

A few days ago, as I addressed the General Assembly of the United Nations, I repeated in the midst of representatives coming from all the corners of the earth the appeal of my country against the arms race. Progress has been made in recent months as the superpowers reached limited strategic agreements.

Yet while these ought to be welcomed as positive developments, we continue to witness increasing exports of conventional armaments to the Third World. Hunger, drought, pestilence and official neglect are tearing apart the sons of misery in Africa, Asia and America. Millions are underfed, dispossessed, and persecuted. Yet the resources that could alleviate such atrocities are being dispensed in the technology of war. Man continues to forget his own divine purpose on earth, and in the process he is negating the superior nature of his mission as a creation of the Almighty. This cannot be and should not be anymore.

Could it be possible to break this never-ending cycle of death and destruction? Would the human family be willing to vanquish racism, intolerance, colonialism and ethnocentrism from the world of tomorrow?

In April of 1986, Pope John Paul II provided a beautiful illustration that added still more significance to the symbol of the cross. Talking to peace leaders of diverse denominational and political backgrounds, the Pope said that just as the cross addresses the horizontal and vertical dimensions of Christianity (service and faith), so it speaks of the world to come. "North and South, East and West. One family. United in love, charity and understanding."

Central to Mennonite tradition is the concept of Christian brotherhood. I find it extremely appropriate to call our attention to this fundamental teaching of Christianity. Love and charity, service, and total commitment to the good of others seem to me to be indispensable values of the world of the future if it is to be a better place to live in.

Goshen's faithfulness to Costa Rica highlights Costa Rican determination to live in peace. My country is proud of a history in which wars of aggression have never been fought. Our nation is well-known not for the strength of its army, but for the shining glory of its peace.

In this you and we share a common dream. War is sinful, and true followers of the gospel shall try to avoid it with all their heart and soul. Therefore we aspire to a human society that will be not violent, but tolerant; not greedy, but abundant and fair; not fearful, but creative; not gloomy, but truly radiant in freedom and peace.

For 20 years, Goshen College has been building peace through international programs in Costa Rica. Thousands are now more aware of the world as a result of this effort. May I rejoice in the extraordinary vision of those of you who, 20 years ago, were able to foresee the crucial role international education was to play in the next century. May I join with this happy family that, being also mine and my country's, remains a true bond between peoples of good will.

Memories of Festival Internationale!

The activities that encompassed Festival Internationale!, Alumni Weekend and Parents Day this year were as colorful as the international flags that fluttered in the breeze high over Yoder Hall. Many people, coming from many different cultures, shared many different life experiences together. For some, the weekend began with dinner in the home of President Victor and Marie Stoltzfus. For others, it was moving to the beat of the Clemente Steel Band, whose instruments were made from 55-gallon oil drums. Or remembering SST experiences with current Costa Rica SST leader Dan Hess, speaking direct from San José. Or eating arroz y frijoles at the SST reunion luncheon. Photographer Howard Zehr captured the exuberant moments through his lens; we invite you to share them again with us on these pages.

SST builders and architects recognized

Several "architects and builders of international education at Goshen College" were among those persons recognized during Festival Internationale.

"Tonight we shall mention just a few of the people who made critically important contributions and celebrate their pioneering leadership," said President Victor Stoltzfus at the Oct. 8 gala banquet.

SST "architects" recognized were Paul Mininger, president emeritus, and Henry D. Weaver, chemistry professor, provost and acting dean at the college from 1957 to 1979.

Mininger was GC's president during the years the visionary SST program was developed. Before beginning his 16-year term as president, he taught Bible and Christian education courses at the college for 17 years. For many years, he was also a pastor and bishop at North Goshen Mennonite Church. After retiring from Goshen, he was vice president for education and training at Wright Institute from 1973 to 1977. Over the decades, Mininger was a visiting scholar at four other universities, and a member of many Mennonite and community organizations.

Weaver, director of the Education Abroad Program at the University of California, Santa Barbara, was executive secretary of the Committee on the Future of the College in the mid-1960s. With "internationalizing the curriculum" as one of the committee's goals, the group formulated what became SST.

The "three important builders" recognized were Arlin Hunsberger, Carl Kreider and J. Lawrence Burkholder.

Hunsberger, director of the Haiti Agro-Forestry Outreach Program, was GC's director of international education from 1968 until his resignation last summer.

Before coming to Goshen College, Hunsberger served in youth activities and construction in a German refugee settlement in Backnang, Germany, at a village canning cooperative in northern Greece, and in development projects in Haiti for Mennonite Central Committee and Church World Service. In Haiti, he directs 40 Haitian and non-Haitian agro-foresters who work in five regional teams to promote tree-planting on small Haitian farms.

Kreider was dean of the college from 1944 to 1970, and was therefore responsible for integrating the new SST into the ongoing curriculum and total campus program. Kreider also served as acting president 1950-51 and 1970-71, and provost 1971-72. From 1952 to 1956, he was dean of the College of Liberal Arts, International Christian University, Tokyo, Japan.

Burkholder was president of Goshen College from 1971 to 1984, and professor of Bible, religion and philosophy from 1949 to 1961. While pastoring a Mennonite congregation in Boston, Mass., from 1961 to 1971, he was also a professor in the department of the church, Harvard Divinity School. Before his academic appointments, Burkholder worked with Church World Service and Mennonite Central Committee in India, China and Vietnam.

In recognizing those contributing to the development of SST, Stoltzfus also acknowledged the Goshen College Board of Overseers, who gave final approval for the program. Five of that year's 12 members were present for the banquet: Lois Gunden Clemens, Dan Kauffman, Norman Loux, Erie Sauder and Dwight Yoder.

Stoltzfus also mentioned GC's faculty of the 1940s, '50s and '60s. "Their vision for global education emerged out of the emergency relief ministries of the Mennonite Church in the aftermath of World War II," he said. "The light that first formed our global vision in those years of hunger and homelessness in Asia and Europe was no less than Jesus Christ, the light of the world."

1966 Record editor says 'Hurrah for the faculty'

The following commentary, written by editor Sara Ann Freed, appeared in The Record Oct. 14, 1966. A news story, "Student Term Abroad Endorsed by Faculty," was featured on page 1 of that issue of the student publication.

The Committee on the Future of the College has one of the most foresighted proposals to come out of committee doors. Educationally radical, logically sound and seemingly possible, the proposal obviously transcends mere faculty philosophizing.

The 1963-64 Report of the President and the Board of Overseers indicated that in any growth plans of the college, the educational program would "continue essentially unchanged."

A few paragraphs following, the report read: "We are seeking to remain sensitive to the educational demands of our constituency and are constantly evaluating new programs and suggestions for expansion."

The Committee on the Future of the College is a direct outgrowth of administrative and faculty sensitivity. If such thinking appears the best way to revitalize our "Culture for Service" slogan in terms of student meaning, let the program be initiated.

Hurrah for the faculty.

Alumni form three committees

The Goshen College Alumni Board met in October for its semi-annual meeting. President Ralph Lugbill '53 led the group through the day-long agenda, which included developing consensus on board objectives.

After reviewing the purposes of an alumni association and board, the board decided to assign some of its work during the next year to three newly created committees.

The Fund Raising Committee, comprised of Ralph Lugbill, Myrl Nofziger '64, Brenda Short Shelby '66 and Orin Beechy '37, will encourage greater alumni participation in raising unrestricted funds.

The Awards and Recognition Committee, with members Philip Rittgers '57, Lucile Conrad Hochstetler '51, Gwen Brenneman Rich '67 and Kerry Stutzman '88, will seek ways to honor and recognize those GC alumni who exemplify our "Culture for Service" motto.

The Communication and Continuing Education Events Committee, comprised of Lucy Yoder Gotwals '52, Sally Yoder Smoker '73, Lorraine Murphy Sheeler '64 and Tom Kennell '74, will work closely with Executive Secretary Lois Kieffaber Bare '79 in identifying opportunities for Goshen College's presence in areas where our alumni are clustered, and developing strategies for better communication.

At the annual meeting of the alumni association, the terms of three outgoing members of the Board were recognized: Lois Yake Kenagy '47, Don Troyer '71, and Tom Yoder '59.

Joann Yoder Smith '63 teaches French at Goshen High School.

Yoder completes two major texts

David E. Yoder '54 completed two major texts this year. Yoder co-edited Decision Making in Speech-Language Pathology and Handbook of Speech-Language Pathology and Audiology. Both books were published by B.C. Decker Inc., a publishing house based in Toronto and Philadelphia. Each book also included essays by Yoder.

Decision Making "is an attempt to systematize the observations and actions that clinicians take in the assessment and management of speech and language disorders," said Yoder. Handbook consists of carefully edited professional statements by 75 leaders in the field of speech-language-hearing, and is expected to be a classic for years.

Yoder was recently the national president of the American Speech-Language-Hearing Association, and since 1986 has been chair of the Department of Medical Allied Health Professions at the University of North Carolina School of Medicine. In addition to teaching, he supervises about 70 professors and instructors.

Metzler best biostatistician

Carl M. Metzler '55 of Kalamazoo, Mich., has become The Upjohn Company's first biostatistician to reach the level of Biostatistics Distinguished Scientist V. The position is the highest level on the company's biostatistician career path.

Metzler is recognized worldwide as an expert in the application of mathematics and statistics to studies that determine the actions of drugs in the body over a given period of time. He is the creator of NONLIN, the most widely used computer software package for drug evaluation.

In 1966 he received the Ph.D. in applied mathematics and experimental statistics from North Carolina State University (Raleigh). He has been at The Upjohn Company since 1965.

McCammon, 710 College Avenue, Goshen, is survived by his wife, Dorothy Snapp McCammon '44, and a daughter, Julia McCammon Stauffer '73.

Before beginning his work in Goshen's bookstore, McCammon was a missionary in China and Japan for 10 years, and Voluntary Service administrator for Mennonite Board of Missions for five years.

Kaufman joins Overseers, Schertz new board chair

Gerald W. Kaufman, Akron, Pa., has joined the Goshen College Board of Overseers.

A 1961 graduate of Goshen College, Kaufman was appointed to the board by the Mennonite Board of Education. He received a master's degree in social work from Indiana University-Bloomington in 1965. The new board member is a clinical social worker with a private practice in marriage, family and individual counseling. He also conducts family-life education seminars.

Kaufman is a member of Akron (Pa.) Mennonite Church, where he is a Sunday-school teacher. He also is a member of the advisory board for Philhaven Hospital/Recovery of Hope and of the Mennonite Economic Development Associates befriending committee.

He gave seminars at the Mennonite general assemblies in Bethlehem, Pa., in 1983 and at Purdue University in 1987. He works with the Lebanon (Pa.) United Fund drive and belongs to the advocacy committee of the National Association of Social Work.

He is married to Marlene Cender, also a 1961 Goshen College graduate. They have four children: Brent, a 1984 GC graduate; Nathan, who attended GC 1982-86; Anne; and Nina, a GC freshman.

Kaufman attended his first Goshen College Board of Overseers meeting Sept. 29-30 and Oct. 1. Leanne Schertz, Peoria, Ill., the new board chair, led the meetings. The board met with the Conference Advisory Board for Goshen College. The board also had a special continuing-education session focusing on the role of overseers in fund-raising efforts.

Congregational aid up for Mennonite students

Mennonite congregations and conferences increased their contributions to help GC students with college costs this year.

One hundred and forty-five congregations and five conferences committed $529,070 to help 537 students with their fees this year. In 1987-88, 465 students received more than $470,000 in aid.

"As a supplement to the congregational aid program, Goshen developed the Assured Matching Program, which guarantees that the college will match a congregation's contribution to each student up to $500," said Walter Schmucker, director of student financial aid. "To be in the program, students must be enrolled full time by May 1 for the coming academic year."

Schmucker said the congregational aid program benefits both churches and students, affirming the positive values of the Anabaptist-Mennonite tradition and promoting a spirit of mutual sharing and servanthood within the congregation.

Although the majority of students at Goshen are Mennonite, about 25 other denominations are also represented.

Sports Update available

Sports Update, a monthly newsletter published by the Sports Information Department, is available to all alumni.

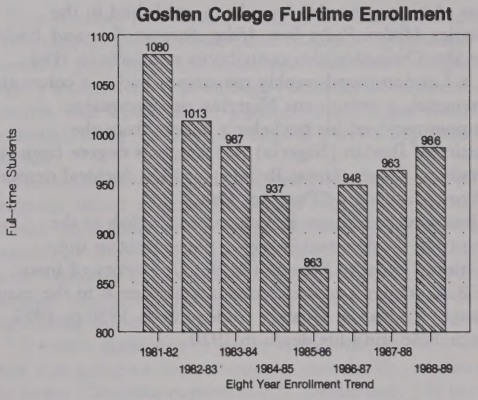
The newsletter focuses primarily on scores, statistics and coaches, and also includes rosters at the beginning of each season. Subscriptions are free.

Those interested in being on the Sports Update mailing list should write Jeff Birky, sports information director.

Habitat chapter opened

Goshen College recently opened one of the first college-based Habitat for Humanity chapters nationwide, and participated in a major workday Sept. 17. Habitat for Humanity is an international organization that strives to provide quality, affordable housing to low-income families. The Habitat program requires that housing recipients must participate in the construction of their own homes, and later help with other Habitat projects.

Plans for the chapter began last year, and this year 55 students already have expressed interest in the group. Sophomore Andrea Bontrager, chapter president, said she is encouraged by the faculty and student support for the chapter.



GC enrollment rises for third consecutive year

Enrollment at GC has increased for the third consecutive year. Interim registrar Stan North Martin said 986 students are enrolled full time for the fall term, compared to 963 in fall 1987.

The full-time equivalent stands at 1,037, compared with 1,014 last year at this time. "The number of students continuing their studies increased from last year," North Martin said.

More than 70 percent of the student body is Mennonite. Students from the Indiana-Michigan Conference make up the largest group with 227 students. About 25 other denominations also are represented.

In addition to its regular programs on campus, GC operates several programs off campus. Thirty-eight students are on SST in the People's Republic of China and Costa Rica during this trimester. Several students are studying in Europe through Brethren Colleges Abroad, at the Urban Life Center in Chicago, Ill., and in the Washington Study Service Year program in Washington, D.C.

Nigerian poet gives S.A. Yoder lecture

Nigerian poet Niyi Osundare presented a reading and lecture last month as the 17th S.A. Yoder Memorial Lecturer.

Following an evening poetry reading, Osundare gave his main presentation, titled "Stubborn Thread in the Shuttle of Being: the Writer as the Memory of the World," in a morning convocation Oct. 21.

Osundare has published five books of poetry, including Songs of the Marketplace (1983), Village Voice (1984), A Nib in the Pond (1986), The Eye of the Earth (1986) and Moonsongs (1988). He received the Commonwealth Poetry Award for The Eye of the Earth.

Some of his poems also have been published in the anthologies Modern Poetry from Africa, Summer Fires and Under Another Sky. Osundare also contributes regularly to West Africa, a London-based weekly magazine, and is a columnist for Newswatch, a prominent Nigerian newsmagazine.

The poet received his bachelor's degree from the University of Ibadan (Nigeria), his master's degree from the University of Leeds (Great Britain) and his doctoral degree from York University (Toronto, Ont.).

He has served as a senior lecturer in English at the University of Ibadan and is now a participant in the International Writing Program at the University of Iowa.

The S.A. Yoder Lecture Series is a memorial to the man who taught English at Goshen College from 1930 to 1935 and from 1946 until his death in 1970.

Choirs perform music in English cathedrals

Performing sacred music in the setting for which it was written was one of the highlights of a summer trip to England for 25 GC students.

Led by Doyle Preheim, professor of music and music department chair, the group participated in the British-American Choral Festival. The festival culminated in a July 9 performance in 1,300-year-old Ely Cathedral.

"I could place myself back in history," said Jay Roth, a bass vocalist who graduated in August. "The songs sounded so sacred and spiritual. The acoustics of the cathedral were really wonderful."

Zoann Haarer, a soprano, also enjoyed the final performance. "Sometimes one could virtually hear overtones of the sound because the acoustics were so pure," she said. "It was an incredible experience that everybody who sings should have."

Four recent graduates joined Goshen's choir, which was composed of singers from both the GC Chamber Choir and the GC Chorale. Also participating in the festival were the Boise (Idaho) State University Choir and the New Cambridge Singers, Cambridge, England.

Each choir performed alone in each of the festival concerts and then performed with the other choirs. John Alldis, a noted British choral conductor, directed the larger choir in rehearsal and performance.

All of the choirs lived at Girton College, one of the 33 colleges which make up Cambridge University. Besides participating in rehearsals and performances, the choirs toured historic sites. "We saw some marvelous cathedrals, King's College Chapel and Roman ruins. The trip was about music and architecture, history and politics," Preheim said.

"I especially appreciated the fact that there was no hint of competitiveness between the groups, nor was the festival in any way billed as a competition," he added. "The week was planned in such a way that there were many opportunities for mingling with singers from the other schools."

Hundreds of spectators watched as Joanna Miller, a freshman from Albion, Ind., and Jason Samuel, a freshman from Brookhaven, Pa., soared up, up and away in a 45-minute free flight balloon ride over the Goshen community. The festivities were part of new student orientation on Sept. 7. Students who were interested in the fantasy ride signed up and two names were drawn, said Prof. Shirley Showalter, coordinator of the event. The Balloon Fantasy is a family enterprise owned and operated by Dr. Gene Stutsman '70 and L. Ann Hertzler Stutsman '71.

Yoder reflects on death

Cynthia Yoder, editor of The Record, wrote about the death of a co-worker and friend in the Sept. 16 issue of the student newspaper. Kathy Wise, an employee at Goshen's South Side Soda Shop, was killed Sept. 14 in an automobile accident. The driver of the other car "had too much to drink."

After reflecting on the pain of her friend's death, Cynthia wrote: "I began this editorial, thinking I'd finish by cursing drunken driving. But that has been done for years with seemingly little impact. It's only when we realize what exactly we are risking, that we will choose not to drive unless we are sober . . . Justice, we may never find. Reason, we find it lacking. Death reminds us that we do need each other — more than we'd like to admit — to find a peace within ourselves that we might not find on our own."

Tennis team, others sport winning records

All seven fall athletic teams began the season with respectable records. Most encouraging was the men's tennis team, which sported a 10-0 record after completing the regular season.

Senior Frank Hess bolstered an already strong men's team, leading the Maple Leafs to defeats of Manchester, Grace, St. Francis, Taylor, Indiana Wesleyan, Marian, Anderson, IUPUI, Huntington and Bethel. Other tennis standouts include Mike Stoltzfus and Terry Slabach.

After seven games, GC's soccer team's record stood at 4-2-2. Leading the way in the season opener was Myron Bontreger, who became the first GC player since Brad Eigsti (1981) to get four goals in one game. Jeff Kauffman, Chad Horning, Dan Haggerty and Virgil Peachey also contributed to the wins against Indiana Wesleyan, Bluffton, Bethel and Grand Rapids Baptist.

In women's cross country meets, Aletha Stahl finished first at the Huntington Invitational, although Huntington defeated GC, 14-22, in the dual. Stahl finished a strong sixth in the Taylor Invitational, losing only to NCAA Division 2 runners or NAIA runners from outside the district.

After several hectic weeks, GC's volleyball team racked up a 12-10 record. Standouts have included Jan Helmuth, Karen Gerber, Melodie Graber, Jan Kolb, Jennifer North and Rita Wyse. The women came in second in the Anderson Invitational.

Goshen's field hockey team defeated five of its first six opponents, spurred on by Ilisa Miller, Michelle Yoder, Lynda Nyce and Regina Miller.

Led by freshman Geoff Douglas' first-place finish, GC won its first men's cross country meet of the year, topping Huntington by eight points in the Huntington Invitational. It was the first time since 1980 that Goshen won a meet with four or more teams. A week later, Goshen finished sixth of 14 teams at the Taylor Invitational.

The women's tennis team started its season against its two toughest opponents, Taylor and St. Mary's, and lost to both. The women recovered with victories over Hanover, Tri-State, Earlham, Anderson and St. Francis, leaving them with a 5-2 record. Susan Hunsberger, Sue Conrad, Jill Wyse, Kim Leuz, Liesel Yoder, Christina Brunk and Emily Headings are leading the team.

Ingold, Beck interns in ministry program

This summer two Goshen College students participated in a program for persons interested in exploring pastoral ministry. Judy Ingold, a sophomore Bible and religion major, was an intern at College (Goshen) Mennonite Church, and Duane Beck, a junior music major from Archbold, Ohio, interned at Central (Archbold) Mennonite Church.

Both students were part of a new Ministry Inquiry Program, which is designed to help college students test whether to pursue further preparation for ministry. The internships offered Ingold and Beck an intense and close-range exposure to pastoral ministry through a three-month full-time church involvement under the guidance of a supervising pastor.

"It was a great way to get to know who was who and what was going on concerning the church, its members and the larger Christian community," Ingold said. "It involved a lot of work, but it was well worth the energy." Ingold spent much time visiting older persons in nursing homes and the hospital. "Performing visitations was hard but also the most rewarding," she said. "That's where I really met people and heard their life stories, which were very meaningful to me."

Beck's learnings included a recognition of how many responsibilities ministers have. "They not only speak on Sundays, they visit people in the hospital, listen to farmers who are in need because of the drought, and have to drop everything to lead a sudden funeral," he explained. Beck's special interest was planning worship.

Both Ingold and Beck are uncertain what future direction their ministries might take them, but both agree that the program was an eye-opener into all of the various facets of church life.

The Ministry Inquiry Program is funded in part by Lilly Endowment, Inc., of Indianapolis, Ind. For 1988 and 1989, the endowment money is providing the initial funds to give 32 students from eight Mennonite colleges the opportunity to explore Christian ministry. Other funding comes from the college, the student's congregation and conference, and the congregation where the student serves. Goshen plans to place at least two more students in congregations next summer.

Hartzler visits Seoul Olympics

Hartzler, recently appointed as national director of soccer for Special Olympics International, traveled to the Olympics with a group of more than 100 Special Olympics athletes and coaches. VISA International sponsored the group's September trip.

Among Hartzler's memories will be some famous faces. He attended a reception at which Juan Antonio Samaranch, president of the International Olympic Committee, gave keepsakes to the Special Olympians. Also attending the reception were film star Arnold Schwarzenegger and his wife Maria Shriver, host of the "Sunday Today" program on NBC.

The Special Olympic delegation also participated in "Coming Together for Peace," a mural-painting ceremony at the Olympic Village led by John Fit, a prominent mural artist who heads the Foundation of Hospital Art. Several well known U.S. athletes also participated, including Tracie Ruiz-Conforto, the synchronized swimmer who won a gold medal in the 1984 Olympics and a silver medal in Seoul, and many members of the U.S. basketball, track and field, and water polo teams. Some of the Special Olympians got to scrimmage with the U.S. women's basketball team.

Dr. Kim, chair of the foreign-relations committee of the Korean National Assembly, hosted an event for the Special Olympians with the ambassadors of Great Britain and Australia and the U.S. deputy ambassador.

Of course, Hartzler also attended several sporting events. He saw the women's 100-meter final, which Florence Griffith Joyner won with a record-breaking time, two soccer games and a men's volleyball game. The volleyball game between the United States and Argentina impressed him.

"The power, the speed and the athletic ability of that game grabbed me more than any of the other sports," he said. "TV doesn't do that game justice. Of all the televised sports, you don't see volleyball enough."

Korea and its citizens also impressed Hartzler. "The Koreans were extremely friendly and helpful," he said, adding that there are few crime and drug problems in the country. "I rode the subway alone several times in the middle of the night. No problem at all. You don't have any fear of getting mugged."

Security was not excessively tight, Hartzler observed, and the few anti-Olympics demonstrations were only minor, back-page news in the Korean press.

Although Hartzler had to miss three Goshen College soccer games, he thought the trip was worthwhile.

"Participating and being part of the games was terrific," he said. "To be able to mingle with athletes and to have met all these people was a chance of a lifetime."

Miller directs activities

Goshen resident Patricia (Trish) Unruh Miller is GC's new director of student activities. As director, she is responsible for coordinating student events on campus such as Fall Festival, Carnival, coffeehouses, concerts and a film series.

Miller, a 1982 GC graduate, is a former business teacher in the Concord Community Schools. She received her master's degree in education from Ball State University in 1985.

She is also a former secretary in the Student Development Division at the college and has served as a camp counselor at Rocky Mountain Mennonite Camp, Divide, Colo., and Camp Mennoscah, Murdock, Kan.

Miller replaces Marty Kelley, who became an administrative assistant in the academic dean's office.

Miller and her husband, Bob, are active members of Clinton Frame Mennonite Church and are the parents of two children.

Faith crossroads theme of Perspectives Week

Goshen College faculty members challenged the campus community to look at crossroads in personal faith during Perspectives Week this fall.

The series revolved around the theme "Crossroads: What Meaning for Us?" Perspectives Week, celebrated in worship for more than 15 years, is an annual series of chapel talks that begin the academic year.

A choral reading, adapted from William Osler's book The Road to Faith, opened the series. "For each of us there is the road of faith and we must find our own pathway," said Ruth Krall, associate professor of Bible and religion.

"The challenge, the road, is what we pursue here (at Goshen College). As we dare to find out what God's promise holds for us, we come to see we do not travel alone at all. God is there and we are dependent on other people. Our inner strengths come from within the community of the faithful."

Throughout the Sept. 12-16 week, present and former members of the faculty spoke about their experiences at the crossroads of life. "The faith I have today is because of the journey, and the journey has not been easy," said Martha Smith Good, campus minister.

Robert Birkey, associate professor of social work, and Frank Bishop, professor emeritus of biology, said they also learned from their experiences. "People in the community of faith have encouraged us in decision-making," Birkey said.

In a talk titled "Forth in Thy Name," President Victor Stoltzfus profiled a public figure, a current Goshen College student, and an alumnus. He said decision-making at the crossroads led them into deeper expressions of their faith.

Alumni couple donates $10,000 to GC faculty

An alumni couple has donated $10,000 to GC to be used by the teaching faculty for their personal and eduational enrichment. The couple wishes to remain anonymous.

"Goshen College has been widely recognized within its constituency and the media for its academic excellence and for its faculty who live the values they teach," the couple said in a letter explaining their gift.

The donors said they gave the $10,000 "in appreciation and affirmation of this quality of labor and the persuasiveness of the Christian faith through your role-modeling."

Teaching faculty members may spend the money on individual activities or they may pool allotments within their departments or divisions to spend on an activity, workshop or new resource.

"The goal is to inspire faculty to improve teaching skills and enhance working relationships within departments," said John Nyce, interim academic dean. Each teaching faculty member's share will be about $140.

Music department joins composing wave

If Bach, Beethoven and Berlioz were alive today, probably none of the three great classical composers would be found sitting at a piano, writing music. Instead, they all would be sitting at computer keyboards, writing music.

Computers have revolutionized music composition, as they have nearly everything else. GC's music department joined the new wave recently when it acquired an Apple Macintosh computer and an accommodative music composition program.

Lon Sherer, who chairs the department, has been working with the music program, and has been using it in some classes.

"The capabilities of editing are extensive," Sherer said. "You can take a whole body of music you've written and transpose it to another key without laboriously having to rewrite and figure the transposition. With a tap on a key, you can change everything.

"The realization that it's so easy to edit and move things around in different places eliminates a lot of what is called writer's block. It's the editing possibilities that make the music writing program so exciting," Sherer explained.

Basically, the composing system consists of a computer screen, a typing keyboard and a special printer. The computer program allows the creation of note lines and bars in which notations can be placed, as well as anything else necessary to compose. The capabilities range from creating a simple musical example to writing an entire symphony.

Composition students also have worked with the computer. "I envision a day when we'll need more computers to accommodate the use generated in classes," said Sherer. "I think that students who go to music school today should confront the use of the computer in music, just as students had to learn word processing."

Since December 1987, the college also has owned a synthesizer, which Sherer calls the last link in the chain of computer composing.

The synthesizer is an electronic keyboard which is connected to the computer. "Anything you play on the synthesizer can be directly transcribed into the computer. That is an extremely fast way to write music," Sherer said.

Zuercher shifts role

William R. Zuercher, formerly Goshen College business manager, has assumed new responsibilities in the college relations department.

Zuercher will work closely with Gordon R. Yoder, director of special and deferred giving, and will be responsible for church relations. Bradley A. Miller, director of church relations, resigned in August to become pastor of the Marion Mennonite Church near Shipshewana.

Mardene Horst Kelley, college controller, has been appointed interim business manager. DeLane Miller, assistant controller, is interim controller.

Faculty experience factor in SST origin

By Victor Stoltzfus

On a routine visit in the mid-1960s, a North Central accreditation team asked GC administrators a simple but profound question: "Why don't you utilize the rich international experience of your faculty in the academic program?" That was the precipitating stimulus which prompted Goshen's development of the Study-Service Term.

In this year of SST celebration, it is important to remember that we would not have initiated SST in 1968 if our young people had not reached out to a war-torn world in the 1940s and '50s. Some of these volunteers for Mennonite Central Committee (MCC) and other mission agencies were in their early 20s, and would later become Goshen College faculty. Others were already on the faculty and provided administrative leadership for the service agencies of the church.

In the midst of the emergency, I doubt that the volunteers considered that the educational byproduct of such service would be language learning and greater cross-cultural sensitivity. The immediate human reality was hungry, homeless people, scarred by World War II. As Christians whose conscience forbade them to fight with bombs and bullets, the young people eagerly fought human despair with food and housing. The following list of service veterans is not complete and does not include faculty who were doing graduate work abroad. Faculty academic areas are noted in parentheses so that readers who were not on campus 40 years ago can appreciate the widespread impact on our curriculum.

Discovering the number of countries served during this era by prospective or actual Goshen faculty is astounding. John (history) and Carol Oyer assisted in food distribution, first in France and then Germany. Art (chemistry) and Oma Smucker worked with voluntary service work camps, building houses in France.

Atlee (psychology) and Winifred Beechy were in Basel, Switzerland, where Atlee was administrator of a multi-million-dollar relief effort in post-World War II Europe. Ralph Gunden (business manager) served as the controller of MCC in Austria and Basel. Harold Bender (history and dean) was a transatlantic commuter those years, traveling through much of Europe as assistant secretary of MCC and collecting rare books for the Mennonite Historical Library at GC.

Lois Gunden Clemens (French), relief worker in France, was interned by the Germans for a year. Already fluent in French, she used the time to study Spanish. Guy Hershberger (history) was in Basel under a peace-education assignment with MCC. His wife Clara was hostess of the MCC center. Under the auspices of Fulbright grants, S.A. (English) and Ethel Yoder and Roy (speech) and Ferne Umble were in Greece. Arlin Hunsberger (SST) worked in the same country under the PAX program, and had earlier worked with refugees in Germany. Paul (physics and registrar) and Bertha Bender served in Amsterdam.

S.L. Yoder (education) worked with the German-speaking Russian Mennonite refugees who were trying to escape to Paraguay. Willard (history) and Verna (Spanish) Smith and C.L. Graber (business manager) followed the German-Russian Mennonite refugees to Paraguay and assisted in resettlement. John (Bible and religion) and Ruth Mosemann, serving under the Eastern Mennonite Board of Missions, were in the east African country now called Tanzania.

In Asia, Carl (economics and dean) and Evelyn Kreider were in Japan, where Carl served as dean of International Christian University. They were earlier in England and would later go to Africa. Melvin (history) and Verna Gingerich were also in Japan, where Melvin lectured on peace in Japanese universities. Don (bookstore manager) and Dorothy McCammon and Verna Zimmerman (nursing) were in China before 1949 under Mennonite Board of Missions. Ernest (president) and Ruth Miller and Ezra (art) and Orpha Hershberger served as a missionaries to India. Harold (physical education) and Pat Yoder served in Korea, and Roman (physical education) and Shirley Gingerich had a Fulbright Lectureship to Thailand. J. Lawrence (philosophy and president) and Harriet Burkholder were with MCC and Church World Service, flying food supplies around China. They were also making friendships that would be valuable in negotiating the first undergraduate exchange program with China in 1981.

A second generation of faculty members continued Goshen's legacy of international service in the '60s prior to the 1968 decision to begin SST, but to recite their names and experiences is beyond the scope of this essay.

At Harvard's 1987 commencement, President Derek Bok spoke of a possible model for Harvard in the year 2036. He dreamed of "branch campuses in 20 countries, an overseas work-study requirement for the baccalaureate degree, and a student body in which one out of three were foreign nationals" (Harvard Magazine, May-June 1988). Given the influential place of Harvard in American higher education, if Bok's dream is realized, we will see a flowering of international education programs in the 2040s and '50s.

There are several valid educational reasons to internationalize the college curriculum. We need to learn the customs and cultures of the world commmunity because nothing human should be foreign to us. Citizens of a superpower should know of the political and military consequences of their position in the world. The global economy is now a reality in services, manufacturing and banking. However, none of these reasons to go abroad constitutes the formative history of SST. Goshen faculty entered the world after World War II as our motto of "Culture for Service" intersected with the call to mission "in the name of Christ."
